STATE OF HAWAI'I, Respondent/Plaintiff-Appellee

vs.

LESS ALLEN SCHNABEL, Petitioner/Defendant-Appellant

NO. SCWC-29390

CERTIORARI TO THE INTERMEDIATE COURT OF APPEALS
(ICA NO. 29390; CR. NO. 07-1-0863)

May 11, 2012

ACOPA, DUFFY, AND MCKENNA, JJ.; AND RECKTENWALD, C.J., DISSENTING, WITH WHOM NAKAYAMA, J., JOINS

OPINION OF THE COURT BY ACOBA, J.

We hold first, that, Hawai'i Revised Statutes (HRS) § 571-84(h) clearly and unambiguously prohibits the use of evidence from juvenile proceedings in any adult criminal case for any purpose whatsoever. Accordingly, the Intermediate Court of Appeals (ICA) gravely erred in affirming the ruling of the circuit court of the first circuit (the court), that Respondent/Plaintiff-Appellee State of Hawai'i (Respondent) would be allowed to introduce evidence from the prior juvenile proceedings of Petitioner/Defendant-Appellant Less Allen Schnabel, Jr. (Petitioner), if Petitioner testified on cross-examination in the instant case that he did not know a single punch could cause the death of a person, State v. Schnabel, No. 29390, 2010 WL 4546655, at *2-3 (App. Nov. 12, 2010) (mem.). Secondly, we hold that the statement of the Deputy Prosecuting Attorney (DPA) to the jury during closing arguments not to "get too caught up in the mumbo jumbo of all the words [of the jury instructions,]" among other statements, infringed on Petitioner's right to have the case against him proven beyond a reasonable doubt. Accordingly, the December 15, 2010 judgment of the ICA, filed pursuant to its November 12, 2010 Memorandum Opinion (memo op.),¹ affirming the court's September 10, 2008 judgment of conviction and sentence, is vacated. This case is remanded for proceedings consistent with this opinion.² Each of the aforesaid

² We find no error in the other points raised by Petitioner and affirm the ICA's opinion insofar as it held that (1) trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to subpoena the physician who had attended to Christopher Reuther prior to his death and who had signed the death certificate, Schnabel, 2010 WL 4546655, at *3, (2) the DPA did not engage in prosecutorial misconduct in displaying a power point slide during closing arguments which stated, "Is there a substantial and unjustifiable risk of death from one punch? . . . Ask [Reuther] if it's substantial and unjustified. He's dead!", id. at *3-4, (3) there was sufficient evidence to sustain errors, standing alone, provides an ample basis for vacation. However, in order to avoid similar errors from being made on remand, both errors are addressed.

I.

The following essential matters are from the record and the submissions of the parties.

A.

On April 22, 2007, at Zablau Beach Park in Nanakuli, Hawai'i, Petitioner allegedly caused the death of Christopher Reuther (decedent) by one punch. Id. at *1. Respondent's witnesses testified that they met decedent at the park, began conversing with him, and eventually invited him to camp with them overnight. At some point decedent left the group, against their warning not to do so, and headed toward the restrooms. According to Respondent's witnesses, as decedent was walking to his car, Petitioner approached him from behind and hit him in the face. Immediately thereafter, decedent "spun out" in a "half-circle" or "jump[ed] around" before collapsing to the ground. Respondent's witnesses testified that Petitioner's actions were unprovoked.

The defense's witness, Kristie Reverio (Reverio), testified that decedent was walking towards the parking lot and taking photographs near where she and Petitioner were standing. Petitioner confronted decedent and asked him if he was taking pictures of them. Decedent responded that he had only taken a picture of the stop sign. Reverio and Petitioner thought decedent was being "sarcastic" and asked to see his camera's viewfinder. Decedent held out the camera for them, but then pulled it back and began walking towards his car with a "smirk" on his face. Petitioner told decedent, "[Y]ou cannot be doing things like that over here, you need to leave."

Decedent then approached Petitioner and stated, "[Y]ou cannot tell me what to do," while in a "fighting stance." Reverio thought Petitioner and Decedent "were going to fight." At that moment, Petitioner punched Decedent on his right cheek. Decedent then fell backward, stood back up, staggered forward, and fell down.

B.

On May 8, 2007, Petitioner was charged with (1) Manslaughter, Hawai'i Revised Statutes (HRS) § 707-702(1)(a) (Supp. 2007)³ and (2) Unauthorized Entry into a Motor Vehicle in the First Degree, HRS § 708-836.5 (Supp. 2007).⁴ Prior to trial, Respondent filed a Notice of Intention to Use Specified Evidence (Notice) indicating that, at trial, it would seek to introduce the following evidence relating to Petitioner's juvenile proceedings: (1) on September 1, 2002, Petitioner attended a party at Nanakuli Beach Park and as complainant attempted to "shake [Petitioner's] hand, [complainant] was suddenly punched on the left side of his face[,] causing [him] to fall to the ground where he was thereafter kicked in the face several times[,]"⁵ (2) Petitioner was "present at his entire trial[,] and (3) Dr. Jorge Camara (Dr. Camara) testified "that an orbital fracture . . . can cause not only a rupture of the bone socket[,] but could also cause a "subdural hematoma in the brain[,] which "could then create a 'substantial risk of death.'" Respondent attached a transcript of Dr. Camara's testimony given at Petitioner's juvenile proceedings as an exhibit to its Memorandum in support of the Notice. According to Respondent, the aforementioned evidence was admissible to show that Petitioner "was on notice that similar acts in the future could cause much more serious injuries[.]"

HRS § 702-206 (1993) provides in part that "[a] person acts recklessly with respect to his conduct when he consciously disregards a substantial and unjustifiable risk that the person's conduct is of the specified nature."

⁴ HRS § 708-836.5, entitled "Unauthorized entry into motor vehicle in the first degree," states, in relevant part:

(1) A person commits the offense of unauthorized entry into motor vehicle in the first degree if the person intentionally or knowingly enters or remains unlawfully in a motor vehicle, without being invited, licensed, or otherwise authorized to enter or remain within the vehicle, with the intent to commit a crime against a person or against property rights.

The defense filed a motion in limine to preclude Respondent from introducing Dr. Camara's testimony pursuant to Hawai'i Rules of Evidence (HRE) Rules 402 (2010)⁶ and 403 (1993).⁷ At the hearing on the motion, Respondent argued that evidence from the juvenile proceedings was relevant to Petitioner's "knowledge" that his conduct, i.e., a single punch, could cause a substantial risk of death. The defense argued that the injuries involved in the juvenile proceedings were "not the same type of injury" as the one in this case because the juvenile case involved "punches and kicks" which were "likely to be much more damaging than a punch." Defense counsel additionally noted that Dr. Camara did not testify that those acts "would cause[,]" but "could cause," bleeding in the brain. Finally, it was argued by the defense that at the time of the juvenile proceedings, Petitioner was seventeen years old and "in a traumatic situation where we hope he was paying attention but well may not have been."

⁶ HRE Rule 402 states in relevant part that "[e]vidence which is not relevant is not admissible."

⁷ HRE Rule 403 states that, "[a]lthough relevant, evidence may be excluded if its probative value is substantially outweighed by the danger of unfair prejudice, confusion of the issues, or misleading the jury, or by considerations of undue delay, waste of time, or needless presentation of cumulative evidence."

After taking the matter under advisement, the court initially ruled that Respondent could not introduce any evidence relating to Petitioner's juvenile proceedings.⁸ Subsequently, however, during further pre-trial proceedings, Respondent moved the court to reconsider its ruling. Respondent also asked the court, in the alternative, "to at least allow [Respondent] to--if [Petitioner] . . . takes the stand and is cross-examined[,] to make reference to the fact[.]"⁹ The court answered that reconsideration was "not going to happen," but considered "what [might] happen[] if [Petitioner] takes the stand and he says he was completely unaware, totally unaware, hit somebody in the [T]his court finds that both the breadth and depth and intensity of the emotions around this case were other than what the court initially thought they would be. Therefore, I'm going to deny this prior incident completely. The only option would be [Respondent would] have to approach the court. [The court would] have to hear what [Petitioner] had to say, if anything, then measure it at that point, but basically it's not coming in at all. I'm not going to bet against myself so to speak or anticipate. . . . I understand that it's relevant under [HRE Rule] 404 . . . but [HRE Rule 403] has caused me to reconsider. . . . [T]he way the jurors responded and my take was . . . way more emotion than I thought . . . it would be with the jurors. . . . It's a mainland visitor; it's Nanakuli; it's a law student; they donated the organs and he apparently allegedly did nothing to provoke it, but we all gotta hear the story . . . when it actually comes out, so it's not coming in. No if [sic], and [sic] or buts[.]"

⁸ The court ruled as follows:

(Emphasis added.)

head, that they [sic] might cause them [sic] serious injury or death."

Defense counsel stated that if the court allowed Respondent to ask Petitioner whether he knew a single punch "could," as opposed to "would," cause death, Petitioner's "answer will be 'no.'" Defense counsel related that even if he did respond in that manner, evidence of Dr. Camara's testimony would not be "sufficient to prove that [Petitioner] did know differently" since Dr. Camara's testimony was about "a punch and kicks" which, when "combined[,] could cause subdural hematoma [which] could cause death[.]" Defense counsel further asserted that the evidence would "mislead the jury," "distract [it] from trying this case[,] and would "be highly prejudicial[.]"

The court then expressed its concern that "most of the men on the jury -- . . . -- understand that a large man that punches another man could kill him." Thus, the court responded that, if Respondent laid a foundation regarding Petitioner's height and weight on the date of the incident and argued that the punch "was a sucker punch or a false crack[,] . . . and [Petitioner] says no way" a punch can cause the death of a person, its "inclination [would be] to give [Respondent] some latitude over [the defense's] strong objection[.]"

In addition to the testimony described supra, the chief medical examiner for the City and County of Honolulu (medical examiner) also testified. The medical examiner related that based on the information provided by the hospital and from the investigator who read the hospital reports, the cause of death was believed to be an aneurysm. She recounted, however, that because there was a "small tear" in decedent's "basilar artery" and a bruise behind his ear consistent with a "fist blow," it was her opinion that decedent died as a result of a "traumatic subarachnoid hemorrhage" caused by an "assaultive blunt force injury to the head." The medical examiner observed that while "you see subarachnoid hemorrhage, non-trauma related[,] " trauma-related subarachnoid hemorrhage is "not very common." In her opinion, decedent's injury was "unique."

As to the difference between the medical examiner's conclusion regarding the cause of death and the conclusion of the hospital, she stated, "I think at that point[,] all [the hospital doctors] knew from their scans was that [decedent] had [] bleeding in the subarachnoid space, which means covering the brain[.]" She explained that the hospital would not have seen the tear "because there was no time for them to inject dye in the[] blood vessels[,] . . . [b]ut at the autopsy, [she] injected dye." The medical examiner stated that she "did not see any aneurysms as the doctors suspected, but instead saw [a] tear[.]" In her view, "you never see an aneurysm right [t]here [where the tear was located; y]ou see aneurysms in different areas, but what I saw was a fresh, tiny torn area."

Petitioner did not testify. After the prosecution rested, the court permitted defense counsel to state on the record that Petitioner had decided not to testify based in part on the fact that Respondent would be allowed to introduce Dr. Camara's testimony from Petitioner's juvenile proceedings if Petitioner testified that he did not know a single punch could cause the death of a person. The court stated,

And [] the reasons stated by you . . . I think are pretty accurate, that we started picking jury [sic], I was going to let in the so-called prior with a limiting instruction. It became clear to me that the gravity was going to keep us from getting a jury and the jury read it differently than I did, and so the Court decided to keep that out and not allow it. The Court decided that [if] the door was opened, it would give a very limiting instruction there, but allow [Respondent] to get into the earlier situation.

D.

On July 7, 2008, the court instructed the jury, among other things, as to the presumption of innocence and proof beyond a reasonable doubt.¹⁰ On the same day, during closing argument,

¹⁰ The court gave the jury the standard instruction as follows:

You must presume the defendant is innocent of the charges against him. This presumption remains with the defendant through the trial of the case, unless and until the prosecution proves the defendant guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

The presumption of innocence is not a mere slogan but an essential part of the law that is binding upon you. It places upon the prosecution the duty of proving every material element of the offense charged against the

the DPA stated,

And when you go in the deliberation room, read the [jury] instructions but use your common sense. That's what this is all about. It's all about common sense. Don't get too caught up in the mumbo jumbo of all the words but use your common sense. . . . [D]ig deep down inside and ask yourself, deep down inside, you know, the gut feeling we talk about deep down inside. Put aside those words. You've heard them. You're analyzing them. And then you reach down deep inside, deep down inside: Is he guilty? And if you can say that, that's your common sense.

(Emphases added.) The defense immediately objected. The court held a bench conference during which defense counsel argued that defendant beyond a reasonable doubt.

You must not find the defendant guilty upon mere suspicion or upon evidence which only shows that the defendant is probably guilty. What the law requires before the defendant can be found guilty is not suspicion, nor probabilities, but proof of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt.

What is reasonable doubt?

It is a doubt in your mind about the defendant's guilt which arises from the evidence presented or from the lack of evidence and which is based upon reason and common sense. Each of you must decide, individually, whether there is or is not such a doubt in your mind after careful and impartial consideration of the evidence.

Be mindful, however, that a doubt which has no basis in the evidence presented, or the lack of evidence, or reasonable inferences therefrom, or a doubt which is based upon imagination, suspicion or mere speculation or guesswork is not a reasonable doubt.

What is proof beyond a reasonable doubt?

If, after consideration of the evidence and the law, you have a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, then the prosecution has not proved the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and it is your duty to find the defendant not guilty.

If, after consideration of the evidence and the law, you do not have a reasonable doubt of the defendant's guilt, then the prosecution has proved the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt and it is your duty to find the defendant guilty.

(Emphasis added.)

the jury was not permitted to decide whether Petitioner was guilty "on their gut." Defense counsel stated, "It's whether [Respondent] has proven beyond a reasonable doubt that [Petitioner]'s guilty that they have to answer. To say otherwise implies that if you have a gut feeling he's guilty, he's just guilty, forget the instructions."

The DPA responded that "[t]he argument is that the feeling inside is your common sense speaking to you. Common sense is what supports all of their decisions in applying the law and determining what the facts are." The court overruled the defense's objection, but gave the following instruction to the jury:

Ladies and gentlemen of the jury, I give attorneys some latitude at closing. The instructions you have as to what reasonable doubt is and isn't and that pity, passion and prejudice have no play, I'll allow you to argue that basically as an illustration of your take on common sense. There's no definition of common sense so I'll give you a little bit of latitude over objection.

(Emphasis added.)

Two days later, on July 9, 2008, the court, without explaining its reasons for doing so, generally instructed the jury once again on reasonable doubt.¹¹ Following deliberations, which took place thereafter, the jury found Petitioner guilty of Manslaughter and not guilty of Unauthorized Entry Into a Motor

Vehicle. Petitioner was sentenced to twenty years of imprisonment. The judgment of conviction and sentence was entered on September 10, 2008.

II.

On October 2, 2008, Petitioner filed a notice of appeal from the judgment of conviction and sentence. Relevant to our disposition, Petitioner contended that (1) the court abused its discretion in ruling that evidence from Petitioner's juvenile proceedings would be admissible if Petitioner testified that he did not know his conduct could cause death and (2) Respondent engaged in prosecutorial misconduct during closing argument.¹²

As to the first of the foregoing contentions, the ICA concluded that, if Petitioner had testified that he was unaware that a single punch could cause death, "he would have opened the door to cross-examination about what he learned in the juvenile proceedings from Dr. Camara's testimony" inasmuch as "[t]he proper scope of cross-examination includes full development of matters broached on direct examination, including facts reasonably related to matters touched on direct.'" Schnabel, 2010 WL 4546655, at *3 (quoting State v. McElroy, 105 Hawai'i ¹² Petitioner alleged that the DPA engaged in misconduct on two occasions during closing arguments. The first related to power point slides. The second related to the DPA's urging the jurors to decide the case from their "gut." As indicated earlier, we affirm the ICA's conclusion that the use of the power point slide did not constitute prosecutorial misconduct. See supra note 2.

352, 356, 97 P.3d 1004, 1008 (2004) (quoting State v. Napulou, 85 Hawai'i 49, 57, 936 P.2d 1297, 1305 (App. 1997))).

According to the ICA, although evidence of a defendant's prior bad acts is generally inadmissible, "[p]rior bad act' evidence under [HRE] Rule 404(b) (1993)^[13] is admissible when 'it is 1) relevant and 2) more probative than prejudicial.'" Id. at *2 (quoting State v. Maelega, 80 Hawai'i 172, 183, 907 P.2d 758, 769 (1995)). The ICA determined that Dr. Camara's testimony would be relevant within the meaning of HRE Rule 401 (1993)¹⁴ "if [Petitioner] had testified that he did not know that one punch could cause death" because "even though the incident in the juvenile proceeding did not involve a single punch, it was evidence having a tendency to make [Petitioner's] proffered assertion that he did not know a single punch could cause death 'more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence.'" Id. (quoting HRE Rule 401).

¹³ HRE Rule 404(b) provides in pertinent part as follows:

Other crimes, wrongs, or acts. Evidence of other crimes, wrongs, or acts is not admissible to prove the character of a person in order to show that he acted in conformity therewith. It may, however, be admissible where such evidence is probative of any other fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action, such as proof of motive, opportunity, intent, preparation, plan, knowledge, identity, modus operandi, or absence of mistake or accident.

It was further decided that, because the court stated it intended to provide a limiting instruction¹⁵ in the event Dr. Camara's testimony was admitted and because Respondent would be prevented from disclosing Petitioner's conviction in those proceedings, Dr. Camara's testimony would be more probative than prejudicial under HRE Rule 403 (1993). Id. The ICA ruled that if Petitioner had testified as indicated, he would have opened the door to cross-examination about what he learned in the juvenile proceedings from Dr. Camara's testimony. Id. It was ultimately held that the court's ruling as to the admissibility of Dr. Camara's testimony was not an abuse of discretion. Id. at *2-3.

As to the second contention raised by Petitioner, the ICA did "have a concern about the DPA saying '[d]on't get too caught up in the mumbo jumbo of all the words but use your common sense.'" Id. (brackets in original). However, the ICA observed that "upon objection from defense counsel, the [court] stated it would allow the argument as an illustration," noting "that 'the jury ha[d] the instructions[,]' " and "after a further objection and a bench conference, the [court] immediately gave a curative instruction." Id. The ICA stated, "Given these circumstances, in particular the immediate curative instruction . . . as well as the strength of the evidence against [Petitioner], we conclude that the statements of the DPA were harmless beyond a reasonable doubt." Id.

III.

On March 15, 2011, Petitioner filed an application for writ of certiorari (Application), urging this court to review the Memorandum Opinion of the ICA. Petitioner presents the following pertinent questions in his Application:

1. Whether the ICA gravely erred in affirming the [] court's holding that if [Petitioner] testified that he did not know that one punch could cause death[,] that [Respondent] could introduce Dr. Camara's testimony from [Petitioner's] juvenile proceedings[.]

. . . .

3. Whether the ICA gravely erred in holding that the DPA did not commit misconduct during closing arguments[.¹⁶]

On March 21, 2011, Respondent filed a Response to the Application.

¹⁶ The other questions raised in Petitioner's Application were:

2. Whether the ICA gravely erred in holding that trial counsel was not ineffective for failing to subpoena the physician [who] had attended to the [decedent] prior to his death and who had signed the death certificate[.]

. . . .

4. Whether the ICA gravely erred in holding that there was sufficient evidence to sustain [Petitioner's] conviction where his use of force had been in self-defense[.]

5. Whether the ICA gravely erred in holding that there was sufficient evidence that [Petitioner] recklessly caused [decedent's] death[.]

To reiterate, we affirm the ICA's opinion as to the foregoing questions, and therefore, they are not specifically addressed herein.

IV.

In connection with the first question, Petitioner argues that evidence from his juvenile proceedings was not admissible because such evidence was not relevant. See HRE Rule 401. Petitioner notes that Dr. Camara testified an orbital fracture resulting from several kicks and punches to the face could result in a subdural hematoma, which could cause death; by contrast, the instant case involved an alleged single punch to the head. Thus, he maintains that the juvenile incident was not relevant because it "was factually dissimilar to the incident in the instant case." According to Petitioner, the court's error in ruling that the evidence would be admitted if Petitioner testified cannot be said to have been harmless because "it impermissibly infringed on [his] right to testify" under the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution¹⁷ and article I, sections 5 and 10 of the Hawai'i Constitution.¹⁸

¹⁷ The Fifth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides in relevant part that no person "shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself[.]" The Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides in relevant part that no "State [shall] deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law[.]"

Respondent's Response states that "Petitioner's presence at the [juvenile] proceeding . . . makes it reasonable to presume he heard [Dr. Camara] render his opinion." Although the juvenile incident did not involve a single punch, Respondent contends Dr. Camara's testimony would have a tendency to make Petitioner's assertion that he did not know a single punch could cause death more or less probable than it would be without the evidence. Respondent asserts that Dr. Camara did not testify that multiple blows to a person's head were required to cause an orbital fracture or resulting subdural hematoma, but, rather, they could result in a subdural hematoma that could cause death. Respondent states, "Simply put," Dr. Camara's testimony indicated that "death can result from a powerful blow to the face."

Regarding any unfair prejudice, see HRE Rule 403, Respondent points out that the court made clear such testimony would only be allowed if Petitioner testified that he was unaware a single punch could cause death. Respondent additionally notes that, in the event that evidence was adduced, the court "would have issued a 'very limiting instruction' to ensure Petitioner would not suffer any unfair prejudice."

V.

On April 28, 2011, supplemental briefing as to the applicability of HRS § 571-84(h) was ordered by this court with respect to Petitioner's first question. In his Supplemental Brief filed on May 9, 2011, Petitioner argues that HRS § 571-84(h) prohibits the use of evidence adduced in a juvenile proceeding "in any civil, criminal, or other cause . . . for any purpose whatever." Petitioner asserts that in State v. Nobriga, 56 Haw. 75, 527 P.2d 1269 (1974), this court "confirmed that evidence adduced in a juvenile proceeding cannot be used in a subsequent criminal case involving the same defendant."

Petitioner contends that such use is also prohibited under HRS § 571-1 (2006 Repl.).¹⁹ In that vein, Petitioner points out that in State v. Riveira, 92 Hawai'i 521, 993 P.2d 555 (2000) [hereinafter, Riveira II], this court overruled the ICA majority in State v. Riveira, 92 Hawai'i 546, 993 P.2d 580 (App. 1999) [hereinafter, Riveira I], and "adopted [the] dissenting opinion" which stated that under HRS § 571-1, "[a]ny evidence given in any case under section 571-11 shall not in any civil, criminal, or other cause in any court be lawful or proper evidence against the child for any purpose whatever [] except in subsequent cases involving the same child under section 571-11.'" (Quoting Riveira I, 92 Hawai'i at 559, 993 P.2d at 593. (Acoba, J., dissenting).) (Brackets omitted.)

¹⁹ HRS § 571-1, entitled "Construction and purpose of chapter[,]" also provides in part, that "[a]ny evidence given in any case under section 571-11 shall not in any civil, criminal, or other cause in any court be lawful or proper evidence against the child for any purpose whatever except in subsequent cases involving the same child under section 571-11." (Emphases added.)

In sum, Petitioner contends that because HRS §§ 571-1 and 571-84(h) prohibit the use of evidence adduced in juvenile proceedings for any purpose whatsoever, the court's ruling as to the admissibility of the juvenile proceedings was based on an incorrect interpretation of the law. Petitioner repeats that such error cannot be said to be harmless where it infringed on his constitutionally and statutorily protected right to testify.

In its supplemental brief filed on May 9, 2011, Respondent preliminarily declares that because Petitioner did not object to Dr. Camara's testimony based on HRS § 571-84(h), he may not argue on appeal that the statute barred the introduction of such evidence. Next, Respondent argues that HRS § 571-84.6, and not HRS § 571-84(h), is applicable in this matter.

HRS § 571-84(a) generally withholds juvenile records including transcripts from public inspection, except as provided in HRS § 571-84.6. HRS § 571-84(a) provides in relevant part as follows:

(a) The court shall maintain records of all cases brought before it. Except as provided in section 571-84.6, in proceedings under section 571-11[,]. . . the following records shall be withheld from public inspection: the court docket, petitions, complaints, motions, and other papers filed in ant case; transcripts of testimony taken by the court; and findings, judgments, orders, decrees, and other papers other than social record filed in proceedings before the court.

(Emphases added.) In that regard, HRS § 571-84.6 (2006 Repl.)²⁰

²⁰ The effective date of HRS § 571-84.6 was June 30, 1997. The incident occurred on April 22, 2007. HRS § 571-84.6 was in effect during subsequent evidentiary rulings by the court.

²¹ HRS § 571-84.6(a) provides that a "[l]egal record' means petitions, complaints, motions, and other papers filed in any case; transcripts of testimony taken by the court; and findings, judgments, orders, decrees, and other papers and adjudication data, other than social records, filed in proceedings before the court." (Emphasis added.)

²² HRS § 571-84(h) is re-quoted for convenience.

Respondent asserts that because HRS § 571-84(a) and (h) both "deal with testimony taken by the court[,]" they "must be construed with reference to each other[.]" (Citing HRS § 1-16 (1993)). According to Respondent, "[t]he clause '[n]otwithstanding any other law to the contrary,' prefacing HRS § 571-84.6(b) and (c) indicates that" those subsections "govern over . . . [HRS §] 571-84(h)," which pertains to the exclusion of evidence. Respondent maintains that the legislative history of HRS § 571-84.6 also "supports the conclusion that [] 'transcripts of testimony taken by the court' in [juvenile] proceedings[] . . . would not be exempt from use in future criminal proceedings." Respondent points to the following passage regarding HRS § 571-84.6:

[T]he purpose of this act is to eliminate the confidentiality of certain records and proceedings of juvenile law violators adjudicated for serious, repeat, or violent offenses in order to maintain public safety, to restore public confidence in the juvenile system, and to send a message to certain juvenile law violators that their actions will be treated seriously.

(Quoting 1997 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 317, § 1 at 755-56.) (Emphasis added.)

According to Respondent, under HRS § 571-84.6(b) and (c), the transcripts of Dr. Camara's testimony, as legal records, and Petitioner's juvenile proceedings, respectively, were accessible to the "public," which, in turn, is defined as "'open or available for all to use, share, or enjoy.'" (Citing State v. Hussein, 122 Hawai'i 495, 522, 229 P.3d 313, 340 (2010).)

Respondent asserts that, therefore, the evidence was also available for use against Petitioner in the instant case. Furthermore, Respondent urges that allowing the admission of "transcripts of testimony taken by the court" "would promote the legislature's express intent 'to eliminate the confidentiality of certain records and proceedings of juvenile law violators'" and "'send a message . . . that their actions will be treated seriously.'" (Quoting 1997 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 317, § 1 at 755-56.) Finally, Respondent avers that since the evidence sought to be admitted would be available for use in a sentencing hearing, (citing Hussein, 122 Hawai'i at 529, 229 P.3d at 347), it should likewise be available for use at trial.

VI.

Although HRS § 571-84(h) was not raised by the parties, or noticed by the court or the ICA, we take judicial notice of the statute. See Life of the Land, Inc. v. City Council of City & County of Honolulu, 61 Haw. 390, 419, 606 P.2d 866, 885 (1980). In Life of the Land, this court found several ordinances relevant to the appeal, although such ordinances were not in the appellate record. See id. This court concluded that "[t]he trial court . . . could have taken judicial notice of those ordinances, and their contents[.]" Id. It was explained that, "[a]uthorities are in conflict [on] whether an appellate court may take judicial notice of municipal ordinances, not in the appeal record, which the trial court could have judicially noticed." Id. Life of the Land determined, however, that "the authorities which permit appellate courts to take judicial notice of such ordinances are more consonant with reason" and therefore, took judicial notice of those ordinances. Id. at 419-20, 606 P.2d at 885.

In the instant case, the court "could have taken judicial notice of the [statute,]" id. at 419, 606 P.2d at 885, under HRE Rule 202(b) (Supp. 2008), which provides in relevant part that "[t]he court shall take judicial notice of "the constitutions and statutes of . . . every state." See also State v. West, 95 Hawai'i 22, 26-27, 18 P.3d 884, 888-89 (2001). In West, this court noted that "[m]ost states with statutes mandating courts to take judicial notice of municipal ordinances require counsel to explicitly ask that the trial court take judicial notice of the particular municipal ordinance." Id. at 27 n.10, 18 P.3d at 889 n.10. However, this court "interpret[ed] the mandatory language of [HRE Rule 202(b)] differently than other states have," holding that the courts of this state "are duty-bound to take 'judicial notice' of municipal ordinances[,]" "just as they do of state statutes." Id. at 26, 18 P.3d at 888.

According to this court, "'[a]lthough the law varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction as to what laws are subject to judicial notice, . . . it is universally accepted that a court must judicially notice the public law of its own jurisdiction.'" "

Id. at 27, 18 P.3d at 889 (quoting Jones on Evidence at § 2:2 n.2) (brackets and ellipsis in original). It was thus concluded that "state circuit and district courts must treat ordinances like state statutes, specifically, as not required to be admitted in evidence or to be expressly requested by counsel." Id. (emphasis added).²³

It would seem apparent from the foregoing that state statutes need not be admitted into evidence or brought to the attention of the court by the parties in order to be noticed by the court.²⁴ West reasoned, "'It is axiomatic that a court must 'know' the law within its jurisdiction; hence a court is required to 'notice' applicable law and to instruct the jury thereon[.]'" Id. at 26-27, 18 P.3d at 888-89 (quoting Clifford S. Fishman & Anne T. McKenna, Jones on Evidence § 2:2 (7th ed. 1992)) (emphasis added). We conclude HRS § 571-84(h) is the "applicable law" in this case. Id.

VII.

The plain language of HRS § 571-84(h) provides that where a minor is adjudicated in a juvenile proceeding under HRS § 571-11(1) or (2), any evidence given therein is prohibited from use against the minor in subsequent proceedings, for any purpose whatsoever, unless the proceeding is a subsequent juvenile proceeding under HRS § 571-11(1). Dr. Camara's testimony constituted "evidence given in [Petitioner's juvenile] proceedings[.]" HRS § 571-84(h). The prosecution in the instant case sought to admit that evidence "against [Petitioner], the minor therein involved." Moreover, the admission of such evidence to impeach Petitioner in the event he testified that he did not know a single punch could cause the death of a person would be admission of the evidence for "any purpose whatever." Further, the proceedings herein constituted subsequent proceedings against Petitioner that were not juvenile proceedings under HRS § 571-11(1), but adult criminal proceedings. Id. Pursuant to the clear mandate of HRS § 571-84(h), Dr. Camara's testimony was inadmissible against Petitioner.

The prohibition against the use of Dr. Camara's testimony in this case is also confirmed by Nobriga. In that case, this court reviewed whether a trial judge could consider, at the sentencing stage, a presentence investigation report (PSI) that included the adult-defendant's juvenile court record, in light of HRS § 571-84. 56 Haw. at 75, 527 P.2d at 1270. It was explained that the provisions of the Family Court Act, which include HRS §§ 571-1 and 571-84, "were designed to afford certain protections to the juvenile involved in an adversary proceeding in any court[.]” Id. at 77, 527 P.2d at 1270. On the other hand, “HRS 706-602 (Supp. 1973) is designed to assist the sentencing authority by requiring that certain basic information be made available in the form of a [PSI] which is made mandatory in certain instances.” Id. at 77, 527 P.2d at 1271.

According to Nobriga, a “clear distinction exists between the adversary proceeding in court and the sentencing process. During the latter, the presiding judge is no longer dealing with the process of determining . . . the guilt or innocence of the defendant, but rather must concern himself with imposing a fair, proper and just sentence.” Id. (internal quotation marks and citation omitted) (emphasis added). Nobriga directed that the purpose of HRS § 571-84 is to “prohibit the use of evidence against the child or minor involved in an adversary proceeding in any court other than Family Court”; it is “not one of a blanket prohibition banning the use of juvenile records in a nonadversary proceeding, that is, at the sentencing stage.” Id. at 78-79, 527 P.2d at 1271-72 (emphasis added). Thus, Nobriga held that the inclusion of a defendant’s juvenile court record in the defendant’s PSI does not violate HRS § 571-84. Id. at 81, 527 P.2d at 1273.

In Riveira II, this court examined whether a defendant’s prior juvenile adjudication constituted a conviction for purposes of applying the repeat offender sentencing provision to the offense of driving without no-fault insurance. 92 Hawai'i at 522, 993 P.2d at 556. This court held that HRS § 571-1 "mandates against treating juvenile adjudications as convictions[,]” stating that “[t]he reasoning underlying our holding is addressed succinctly by [the] dissent” in Riveira I. Id. (emphasis added).²⁵

In Riveira I, the dissent reasoned that a juvenile adjudication could not be treated as a prior criminal conviction because, among other things, HRS § 571-1 directs, “without qualification,” “that ‘no adjudication by the [family] court of the status of any child under th[is] chapter [571] shall be deemed a conviction.’” 92 Hawai'i at 559, 993 P.2d at 593 (Acoba, J., dissenting) (brackets in original). In addition, “HRS § 571-1 instructs that any evidence used in law violation

²⁵ To reiterate, HRS § 571-1 provides in relevant part:

Construction and purpose of chapter. . . .
This chapter creates within this State a system of family courts and it shall be a policy and purpose of said courts to promote the reconciliation of distressed juveniles with their families, foster the rehabilitation of juveniles in difficulty, render appropriate punishment to offenders, and reduce juvenile delinquency. The court shall conduct all proceedings to the end that no adjudication by the court of the status of any child under this chapter shall be deemed a conviction[.] . . . Any evidence given in any case under section 571-11 shall not in any civil, criminal, or other cause in any court be lawful or proper evidence against the child for any purpose whatever except in subsequent cases involving the same child under section 571-11.

(Emphases added.)

proceedings 'shall not in any . . . criminal . . . cause in any event be lawful or proper evidence against the child for any purpose whatever [] except in subsequent cases involving the same child under section 571-11.'" Id. (ellipses in original).

According to the Riveira I dissent, "The plain import of this provision is that any evidence of no-fault insurance violations may only be used in subsequent family court proceedings" and "cannot be offered as evidence 'for any purpose whatever []' in any court." Id. Riveira II, having adopted the reasoning of the Riveira I dissent, also confirms that, while evidence presented in juvenile proceedings may be used as evidence in subsequent juvenile proceedings against the minor, it cannot be offered as evidence for any purpose whatsoever in any other court.²⁶

In the trial herein, Respondent sought to introduce evidence given in Petitioner's juvenile proceedings.

Respectfully, here, the court should have been alerted to the applicability of HRS § 571-84(h) inasmuch as Petitioner's insistence that the evidence was inadmissible bore directly on the long standing statutory bar to such evidence. Under the circumstances, HRS § 571-84(h) was directly and obviously applicable and plainly controlling.²⁷ As a result, in this case, we take judicial notice of HRS § 571-84(h). Applying it, we conclude that in light of HRS § 571-84(h), the court erred in ruling that if Petitioner testified on cross-examination that he did not know a single punch could cause the death of a person, Respondent could introduce evidence from Petitioner's juvenile proceedings. Alternatively, we also conclude that the court's failure to apply HRS § 571-84(h) was plain error.²⁸

²⁷ The dissent refers to the foregoing language as a "test" for when trial courts or appellate courts must take judicial notice of a statute. Dissenting opinion at 13. The dissent states this "test" has no basis in our rules of penal procedure, evidence, appellate procedure, or HRE Rule 202(a). See id. However, the particular facts of this case give rise to the conclusion that HRS § 571-84 was directly and obviously applicable and plainly controlling. Whether this formulation is germane in any particular case would depend on the circumstances. The facts and circumstances of this case indicate we should take judicial notice of HRS § 571-84(h).

It is well-established that a court's error can be noticed for plain error. see State v. Stenger, 122 Hawaii 271, 282, 226 P.3d 441, 452 (2010) (noting that "the court's failure to instruct" was reviewed under the plain error standard of review, which, in the case of erroneous jury instructions, is merged with the harmless beyond a reasonable doubt standard); (continued...)

VIII.

Respondent is incorrect that HRS § 571-84.6(b) and (c),²⁹ as opposed to HRS § 571-84(h), govern the admissibility of evidence from juvenile proceedings in subsequent proceedings involving the minor.

A.

As recounted, Respondent maintains that HRS § 571-84(a) and HRS § 571-84(h) must be construed with reference to each other because both HRS § 571-84(a) and (h) deal with transcripts

State v. Vellina, 106 Hawai'i 441, 450, 106 P.3d 364, 373 (2005) (noting that plain error arose when circuit court's sentence to consecutive terms was based on the exclusive reliance of unproven assertions by the prosecutor that the defendant sold guns to a "drug dealer"); State v. Aganon, 97 Hawai'i 299, 304, 36 P.3d 1269, 1274 (2001) (noting that the "court's [error in] jury instructions were plainly erroneous"); State v. Fagaragan, 115 Hawai'i 364, 368, 167 P.3d 739, 743 (App. 2007) ("We first consider whether the circuit court [plainly] erred by entering judgment and sentencing [the defendant] on both Counts One and Two.")

Because the court's error also infringed on Petitioner's substantial right to testify, as elucidated herein, it may be noticed for plain error. See State v. Staley, 91 Hawai'i 275, 286, 982 P.2d 904, 915 (1999) ("Because the circuit court's error infringed upon [the defendant's] constitutional right to testify, we address it as plain error."); see also State v. Wakisaka, 102 Hawai'i 504, 515, 516, 78 P.3d 317, 328, 329 (2003) (stating that "the prosecution cannot comment on the defendant's failure to testify because this infringes on the defendant's right not to be a witness against her-or himself" and "the prosecution[']s improper[] comment[] on [the defendant]'s failure to testify" "constitutes plain error which affected [defendant]'s substantial rights"). This court "will apply the plain error standard of review to correct errors which seriously affect the fairness, integrity, or public reputation of judicial proceedings, to serve the ends of justice, and to prevent the denial of fundamental rights." Nichols, 111 Hawai'i at 334, 141 P.3d at 981. Therefore, plain error review applies in this case.

of testimony given in juvenile proceedings. (Citing HRS § 1-16). According to Respondent, since HRS § 571-84(a) is subject to HRS § 571-84.6, HRS § 571-84(h) should likewise be subject to HRS § 571-84.6. Respondent invokes HRS § 1-16, which provides that “[l]aws in pari materia, or upon the same subject matter, shall be construed with reference to each other,” and “[w]hat is clear in one statute may be called in aid to explain what is doubtful in another.” (Emphases added.)

However, HRS § 571-84(a) and (h) do not deal with “the same subject matter.” HRS § 1-16. HRS § 571-84(a) specifically provides that “records,” including “transcripts of testimony taken by the court[,]” “shall be withheld from public inspection.” (Emphasis added.) On the other hand, HRS § 571-84(h) provides that “[e]vidence given in juvenile proceedings” “shall not in any . . . criminal . . . cause be lawful or proper evidence against the minor therein involved.” It is apparent that HRS § 571-84(a) deals with public inspection of records, while HRS § 571-84(h) governs the use of evidence given in a minor’s juvenile case against such minor in subsequent proceedings. Accordingly, these two sections do not deal with the same subject matter and should not be construed with reference to each other.

Assuming arguendo, the two sections could be said to deal with the same subject matter, inasmuch as “records” in juvenile cases, HRS § 571-84(a), and "evidence given in juvenile proceedings," HRS § 571-84(h), both could encompass transcripts of testimony, HRS § 1-16 relates to the use of one statute to "explain what is doubtful in another." But, "'where the statutory language is plain and unambiguous, our sole duty is to give effect to its plain and obvious meaning.'" State v. Kalama, 94 Hawai'i 60, 64, 8 P.3d 1224, 1228 (2000) (quoting Citizens for Protection of N. Kohala Coastline v. County of Hawai'i, 91 Hawai'i 94, 107, 979 P.2d 1120, 1133 (1999)). HRS § 571-84(h) is not ambiguous and manifestly directs that evidence in Petitioner's juvenile proceedings was inadmissible in his trial herein, for any purpose whatsoever, impeachment or otherwise. Thus, there is nothing doubtful in HRS § 571-84(h) that would require resort to HRS § 571-84(a).

B.

In addition, it is evident from the face of HRS § 571-84, that while the legislature made HRS § 571-84(a) subject to HRS § 571-84.6, the legislature did not subject HRS § 571-84(h) to the provisions of HRS § 571-84.6. HRS § 571-84(a) expressly provides that, "[e]xcept as provided in section 571-84.6," "transcripts of testimony taken by the court" in juvenile proceedings, "shall be withheld from public inspection[.]" Contrastingly, HRS § 571-84(h), which makes no mention of HRS § 571-84.6, is not qualified by an exception clause. It is logical that HRS § 571-84(a) would be subject to HRS § 571-84.6, and HRS § 571-84(h) would not. HRS § 571-84(a) prohibits public inspection of records of juvenile proceedings, while HRS § 571-84.6(b) contains an exception to the prohibition in HRS § 571-84(a), by allowing public access to such records in certain prescribed instances. On the other hand, none of the subsections of HRS § 571-84.6 contain any exception to the prohibition in HRS § 571-84(h) that have to do with the inadmissibility of juvenile case evidence in subsequent proceedings.

C.

Nor is it conceivable that, although HRS § 571-84(h) is not subject to HRS § 571-84.6, the phrase "[n]otwithstanding any other law to the contrary" in HRS § 571-84.6(b) indicates that its provisions are to apply even when a conflicting statute does not specifically make an exception for HRS § 571-84.6. The term "contrary" denotes a "conflict." See Merriam Webster's Collegiate Dictionary 765 (10th ed. 1989) (defining "contrary," inter alia, as "being opposite to or in conflict with each other"). "[T]wo statutes conflict" where "[i]t is not possible to give effect to both[.]" State v. Richie, 88 Hawai'i 19, 35, 960 P.2d 1227, 1243 (1998). It is possible, however, to give effect to both HRS § 571-84.6 and HRS § 571-84(h). The transcripts of testimony given in Petitioner's prior juvenile proceedings could be open to the public for inspection, while at the same time, evidence given in such proceedings would be precluded from use in subsequent adversarial proceedings. Accordingly, HRS § 571-84(h) is not a "law to the contrary" of HRS § 571-84.6, and, thus, HRS § 571-84.6 is inapplicable here.

As observed, Respondent also maintains that the admission of the subject evidence would promote the legislature's objective of eliminating confidentiality of certain juvenile records and of sending a message.³⁰ Initially, the legislative history that Respondent quotes does not apply here inasmuch as it governs public inspection of juvenile records, not the admissibility of evidence given in juvenile proceedings. Thus, such legislative history is irrelevant.

Moreover, contrary to Respondent's position, the legislature did not "announce its departure from the previous 'rehabilitative approach to juvenile justice'" in favor of "a new legislative policy to protect the public." In enacting HRS § 571-84.6, the legislature explained that "the juvenile system in Hawai'i and other states was originally designed to shield children from publicity, out of concern for the welfare of the child" and "'protect the young person from the stigma of his misconduct and is rooted in the principle that a court concerned with juvenile affairs serves as a rehabilitative and protective agency of the state.'" 1997 Haw. Sess. Laws Act 317, § 1 at 756 (citing Smith v. Daily Mail Publ'g Co., 443 U.S. 97, 105 (1979) (emphasis added)).

As opposed to Respondent's assertions, the legislature confirmed the rehabilitative objective of juvenile proceedings, stating that, "[w]hile continuing to support the rehabilitative approach to juvenile justice," the legislature believed that "public safety and waning public confidence in the juvenile justice system necessitate the development of a legislative policy which balances these concerns with the principles of protection and rehabilitation." Id. (emphases added). The legislature attempted to strike this balance by "eliminat[ing] the confidentiality of certain records and proceedings of juvenile law violators[,]" and did not express any intent to allow for the admissibility of evidence from juvenile proceedings in subsequent adversarial proceedings. Id. (emphases added). Thus, the foregoing legislative history does not support the admission of evidence from Petitioner's juvenile proceedings in this case.³¹

³¹ Finally, Respondent's reliance on Hussein is misplaced. In Hussein, this court considered the Commentary on HRS § 706-604(2), that requires the court to furnish a copy of the PSI to the defendant and the attorneys because "[t]he question of whether the defendant should be sentenced to imprisonment or to probation is no less significant than the

Having determined that the court's ruling that evidence of Petitioner's juvenile proceedings could be admissible violated HRS § 571-84(h), we conclude the ruling constitutes reversible error. This court has explained that

"[e]rror is not to be viewed in isolation and considered purely in the abstract. It must be examined in light of the entire proceedings and given the effect to which the whole record shows it to be entitled. In that context, the real question becomes whether there is a reasonable possibility that error might have contributed to conviction."

State v. Duncan, 101 Hawai'i 269, 278, 67 P.3d 768, 777 (2003) (quoting State v. Heard, 64 Haw. 193, 194, 638 P.2d 307, 308 (1981)).

A.

As related, defense counsel noted on the record that the court's ruling was a reason Respondent decided not to testify. In this way, the court's error infringed upon Petitioner's constitutionally and statutorily protected right to testify. Tachibana v. State, 79 Hawai'i 226, 231, 900 P.2d 1293, question of guilt[.]'" 122 Hawai'i at 529, 229 P.3d at 347 (quoting Commentary on HRS § 706-604(2)) (brackets in original). According to Respondent, because juvenile records may be included in a PSI for purposes of sentencing, they should likewise be admissible against the defendant during the "guilt" phase. However, the Commentary cited in Hussein concerned the defendant's right to controvert the contents of the PSI. While the sentencing phase may be no less significant to a defendant inasmuch as both phases involve the defendant's liberty, the same rationale does not support a right of the prosecution to use evidence against a defendant, where such use is plainly prohibited by statute.

1298 (1995)³² (quoting State v. Silva, 78 Hawai'i 115, 122-23, 890 P.2d 702, 709-10 (App. 1995)). Error that infringes on one's constitutionally protected right cannot be said to be harmless beyond a reasonable doubt. State v. Cuevas, 53 Haw. 110, 115, 488 P.2d 322, 325 (1971) (concluding that "error is neither unimportant nor insignificant" where "it infringes upon a basic right of the accused"; "[in such instances, the error] raises a reasonable possibility that it might have contributed to the conviction" such that it "cannot [be said] that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt"); see also State v. Amarin, 61 Haw.

³² The Tachibana court explained that a defendant's right to testify is guaranteed by the constitutions and statute.

The right to testify in one's own behalf arises independently from three separate amendments to the United States Constitution. It is one of the rights guaranteed by the due process clause of the fourteenth amendment as essential to due process of law in a fair adversary process.

. . . . The right to testify is also guaranteed to state defendants by the compulsory process clause of the sixth amendment as applied through the fourteenth amendment. . . .

Lastly, the opportunity to testify is also a necessary corollary to the Fifth Amendment's guarantee against compelled testimony, since every criminal defendant is privileged to testify in his [or her] own defense, or to refuse to do so.

Because the texts of sections 5, 14, and 10 of article I of the Hawai'i Constitution parallel the fourteenth, fifth, and sixth amendments to the United States Constitution, . . . the right to testify is also guaranteed by these parallel provisions of the Hawai'i Constitution.

. . . . There is also a statutory protection for the right to testify. HRS § 801-2 (1985) states:

In the trial of any person on the charge of any offense, he or she shall have a right . . . to be heard in his or her defense.

79 Hawai'i at 231-32, 900 P.2d at 1298-99 (quoting Silva, 78 Hawai'i at 122-23, 890 P.2d at 709-10 (ellipses in original) (brackets omitted)).

356, 362, 604 P.2d 45, 50 (1979) (concluding that because "trial court's error in admitting the defendant's illegally obtained confession infringed upon the defendant's constitutional right," "the error raised the reasonable possibility of having contributed to the conviction below" such that it "cannot [be] sa[id] that it was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt"); State v. Mitchell, 88 Hawai'i 216, 227-28, 965 P.2d 149, 160-61 (App. 1998) (concluding that the error that "violated [the defendant's] due process rights" "was not harmless beyond a reasonable doubt" because "[a]n accused's right to due process is of overriding importance").

The relevant question under the harmless beyond a reasonable doubt standard is "'whether there is a reasonable possibility that error might have contributed to conviction.'" Duncan, 101 Hawai'i at 278, 67 P.3d at 777 (quoting Heard, 64 Haw. at 194, 638 P.2d at 308) (emphases added). Here, the admission of Dr. Camara's testimony was highly contested at trial and the court's erroneous ruling affected Petitioner's decision not to testify. Consequently, there is a "reasonable possibility" that the court's error "might have" contributed to his conviction.

The court's ruling was a factor in precluding testimony from Petitioner negating the requisite reckless state of mind.³³ As related, Petitioner indicated that he would testify he was unaware a single punch could cause the death of a person. However, the court ruled that if Respondent laid a foundation as recounted, supra, and Petitioner testified as indicated, the court would be inclined to allow Respondent latitude in admitting the evidence from the juvenile proceeding. An assertion by Petitioner that he did not know his one punch carried with it a substantial risk of death was evidence that could have negated the requisite state of mind. Cf. State v. Pacheco, 96 Hawai'i 83, 97, 26 P.3d 572, 586 (2001) (stating that, "had the jury believed Pacheco's testimony, it may well have harbored a reasonable doubt as to whether Pacheco had possessed the state of mind requisite to committing the offense of second degree escape"). Such testimony would have been corroborated, at least to some extent, by the medical examiner's testimony that the injury that caused decedent's death was "not very common" and "unique." However, the court's announced decision to allow evidence from the juvenile proceeding impeded Petitioner's proffer of evidence regarding his state of mind. Hence, it is reasonably possible that the court's error might have contributed to Petitioner's conviction inasmuch as the error was a consideration in his decision not to testify, and, thus, was not harmless beyond a reasonable doubt.

C.

Such an error also affected Petitioner's claim of self-defense. See Domingo, 69 Haw. at 70, 733 P.2d at 692 (holding that the trial court's admission of a physician's testimony to impeach the defendant's testimony that decedent had "c[o]me at him with a sharp object[,] " where such admission was statutorily prohibited, "[could not] be said to be harmless beyond a reasonable doubt[,] " "[g]iven the assertion of self-defense and the fact that the jury might have returned a verdict of manslaughter, rather than murder"). "[T]he use of force upon or toward another person is justifiable when the actor believes³⁴ that such force is immediately necessary for the purpose of protecting himself against the use of unlawful force by the other person on the present occasion." HRS § 703-304(1) (1993) (emphasis added). "The facts of consequence to the determination of self-defense . . . all concern the actor's state of mind: (1) whether the actor reasonably believed that [] force was necessary; and (2) whether the actor reasonably believed that he or she was threatened with one of the specified harms[.]"

State v. Kupihea, 80 Hawai'i 307, 316, 909 P.2d 1122, 1131 (1996) (emphases added).

Consequently, "the critical factor in determining whether an actor's conduct is justified is the actor's state of mind or belief respecting facts and circumstances." Supplemental Commentary on HRS § 703-300 (1993); see also State v. Augustin, 101 Hawai'i 127, 128, 63 P.3d 1097, 1098 (2002) (stating that the reasonableness as to a defendant's use of force "is determined from the point of view of a reasonable person in the [d]efendant's position under the circumstances as he believed them to be"; in other words, the jury "must consider the circumstances as the [d]efendant subjectively believed them to be at the time he tried to defend himself") (quoting State v. Pemberton, 71 Haw. 466, 477, 796 P.2d 80, 85 (1990)) (brackets in original).

Petitioner was the only person who could testify as to his subjective belief of the facts and circumstances surrounding his use of force. The crux of his defense would be testimony regarding his belief that force was necessary and that decedent had in fact threatened him with harm. Petitioner's defense would have been corroborated by Reverio's testimony. Again, it is reasonably possible that the court's error might have contributed to Petitioner's conviction inasmuch the court's ruling as to the juvenile proceedings was a factor in his decision not to testify.

Thus, the error cannot be said to be harmless beyond a reasonable doubt.

We next consider Petitioner's third question, whether the DPA engaged in misconduct during closing argument by advising the jury that the instructions were "mumbo jumbo," that the jury instructions could be disregarded,³⁵ and that the jurors could decide the question of guilt based on their "gut feeling[.]" Respondent argues that the court's instruction that the jury was not bound by the closing arguments would ensure the jury would base its decision on the evidence and law;³⁶ that the DPA made these statements in discussing reasonable doubt and reiterated that the jurors were to "'apply common sense, the law[,] and the facts' when determining whether the evidence proved Petitioner's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt"; and that the court "took the

³⁶ In its Response, Respondent points to the following instruction:

Statements or remarks made by counsel are not evidence. You should consider their arguments to you, but you are not bound by their recollections or interpretations of the evidence. . . .
. . . . [W]e're going to hear closing arguments as you're well aware. You've heard the evidence. You have the law. It's the attorneys' views. Listen carefully but you're not bound by their recollections of the evidence or the law. . . .

(Ellipses in original.)

uncommon and additional prophylactic step of issuing [an] admonition" to the jury that Respondent was required to prove Petitioner's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt "after [closing] arguments[.]" (Emphasis in original.)

Respondent concedes that "in hindsight, the [DPA] should have eschewed the inclusion of the obviously colloquial expression 'mumbo jumbo of all the words' for a more conventional phrase[.]" but argues that, "[c]onsidering the context in which the [DPA] made the statements, the immediate curative instruction of the court, and the 'strength of the evidence' against Petitioner," the ICA did not gravely err "in concluding the statements were 'harmless beyond a reasonable doubt.'" (Quoting Schnabel, 2010 WL 4546655, at *4.)

XI.

Here, the DPA's remarks during closing argument constituted misconduct.³⁷ The DPA stated, "And when you go in the deliberation room, read the[jury] instructions but . . . [d]on't get too caught up in the mumbo jumbo of all the words but use your common sense." (Emphasis added.) The term "mumbo jumbo," as used in the foregoing context, would mean "unnecessarily involved and incomprehensible language:

gibberish[.]” Merriam Webster’s Collegiate Dictionary at 765 (capitalization omitted). Thus, the DPA essentially suggested to the jury that the jury instructions were incomprehensible gibberish, thereby denigrating statements of law on which the jury had been or would be instructed.

The DPA reinforced the “mumbo jumbo” reference by telling the jury to “[p]ut aside those words [of the instructions].” By doing so, the DPA again reinforced the proposition that the jurors could disregard the law embodied in the instructions. The DPA told the jurors more than once, and in more than one way, to decide the case by “gut feeling,” imploring each juror to “dig deep down inside and ask yourself,” “based on your gut feeling[,] . . . Is he guilty?” (Emphasis added.) He further misstated the law in telling the jurors that basing Petitioner’s guilt on their “gut feeling” was equivalent to the exercise of their “common sense.”

The court instructed the jury that reasonable doubt “is a doubt in your mind about the defendant’s guilt which arises from the evidence presented or from the lack of evidence and which is based upon reason and common sense.” (Emphasis added.) “Reason” is defined, among other things, as “the power of comprehending, inferring or thinking esp[ecially] in [an] orderly rational way[.]” Id. at 974. “Common sense” is defined in part as "[g]ood, sound, ordinary sense" or "good judgment[.]" Webster's Third New Int'l Dictionary 540 (1960). In contrast, a "gut feeling" is something "visceral" "arising from one's inmost self[.]" Merriam Webster's Collegiate Dictionary at 519. Giving way to a "gut feeling" is the antithesis of reason--thinking in "an orderly and rational way," and common sense--exercising sound and prudent judgment, as extolled by the instruction. Accordingly, Respondent was incorrect in equating a "feeling inside" to common sense.

Respectfully, the court also erred in accepting Respondent's argument that "gut feelings" could be equated with common sense, and in ignoring the fact that common sense is to be considered in tandem with "reason." The DPA's statement, then, improperly "invite[d] the jury to base its verdict on considerations other than the evidence in the case," unguided by the law. State v. Mars, 116 Hawai'i 125, 143, 170 P.3d 861, 879 (App. 2007). In sum, the DPA's remarks were plainly erroneous and amounted to prosecutorial misconduct. State v. Cardus, 86 Hawai'i 426, 433, 439, 949 P.2d 1047, 1054, 1060 (App. 1997) (concluding that the prosecutor's statement during rebuttal argument "urg[ing] the jury to, in effect, ignore the jury instructions and follow their 'common sense'" "was improper" and "constituted prosecutorial misconduct").

XII.

Having determined that the DPA's statements amounted to misconduct, we must decide whether such misconduct warrants vacation. "Allegations of prosecutorial misconduct are reviewed under the harmless beyond a reasonable doubt standard," and do not warrant vacation or reversal unless "there is a reasonable possibility that the error complained of might have contributed to the conviction." State v. Mainaupo, 117 Hawai'i 235, 247, 178 P.3d 1, 13 (2008) (quoting State v. Iuli, 101 Hawai'i 196, 204, 65 P.3d 143, 151 (2003)). In deciding the foregoing question, we must consider the following factors: "(1) the nature of the conduct; (2) the promptness of a curative instruction; and (3) the strength or weakness of the evidence against the defendant." Id. at 252, 178 P.3d at 18 (2008) (quoting State v. Hauge, 103 Hawai'i 38, 47, 79 P.3d 131, 140 (2003) (quoting Pacheco, 96 Hawai'i at 93, 26 P.3d at 582)).

The nature of the prosecutor's conduct was not harmless. As officers of the court, counsel are bound to respect the law, as embodied in the instructions, not to impugn it. The DPA's argument to the jurors encouraged disdain for the law. Contending that the jurors could decide the case on their "gut feelings" clashed with the instruction on reasonable doubt. In essence, the DPA's argument abrogated Respondent's duty to prove each element of the offense under the standards set forth in the reasonable doubt instruction as is constitutionally and statutorily required.³⁸ See Murray, 116 Hawai'i at 10, 169 P.3d at 962 ("The defendant's right to have each element of an offense proven beyond a reasonable doubt is a constitutionally and statutorily protected right."). "[A]lthough this court has previously allowed the prosecution wide latitude when making closing remarks, . . . a prosecutor's comments may not infringe on a defendant's constitutional rights." State v. Mattson, 122 Hawai'i 312, 325, 226 P.3d 482, 495 (2010). Based on the foregoing, the misconduct was not harmless as to the first factor.

As to the second factor, no curative instruction was given in this case. The overarching fact, with respect to the impact of the court's ruling on the jury, was that the defense's objection was overruled. Pacheco, 96 Hawai'i at 96, 26 P.3d at 585 ("Regarding the second factor, the circuit court gave no curative instructions to the jury. Indeed, when the DPA first characterized Pacheco as an 'asshole' during his cross-examination of him, the circuit court overruled defense counsel's objection."); see also State v. Meyer, 99 Hawai'i 168, 172, 53 P.3d 307, 311 (App. 2002) (stating that "no specific curative instruction was given by the court in this case because the court overruled defense counsel's objection to the DPA's [statements]"); State v. McGriff, 76 Hawai'i 148, 160, 871 P.2d 782, 794 (1994) ("Generally, a prosecutor's improper remarks are considered cured by the court's instructions to the jury, because it is presumed that the jury abided by the court's admonition to disregard the statement." (Internal quotation marks and citation omitted).); Pemberton, 71 Haw. at 475, 796 P.2d at 84 (noting that it is "presumed" that the jury will abide by a court's admonition to disregard an improper argument); State v. Melear, 63 Haw. 488, 497, 630 P.2d 619, 626-27 (1981) (noting that the circuit court "instructed the jury to disregard the arguments of the prosecutor[,]" which "removed any harm or prejudice . . . caused by the prosecutor's statements"); State v. Cavness, 46 Haw. 470, 473, 381 P.2d 685, 686-687 (1963) ("When the Court has instructed that something which the[jurors] have heard is not to be considered by them, we must presume in favor of their oath and public duty." (Internal quotation marks and citations omitted).). Consequently, "by overruling defense counsel's objection, the [] court, at least tacitly, placed its imprimatur upon the DPA's

[improper remarks.]”³⁹ Pacheco, 96 Hawai‘i at 96, 26 P.3d at 585.⁴⁰

Unlike in Cardus, where the ICA concluded that similar comments did not warrant a mistrial,⁴¹ the jurors here were never

⁴⁰ The dissent suggests that “all” of the foregoing cases are distinguishable, but refers only to Pacheco and Meyer. See dissenting opinion at 42-43. According to the dissent, all of the cases including Pacheco and Meyer are distinguishable because in those cases, the trial court did not refer the jury to an instruction that was “contrary to the argument being made by the prosecutor.” Id. The dissent maintains it was the reasonable doubt instruction that was “contrary” to the prosecutor’s argument and thus curative. Id. at 43. But the court did not sustain the objection and tell the jury to disregard the improper argument. See discussion supra; see State v. Espiritu, 117 Hawai‘i 127, 143, 176 P.3d 885, 901 (2008) (holding that “[n]o curative instruction was given[,]” and the court’s instructions did not “disabuse[]” the jury of the prosecutor’s improper remarks); Pacheco, 96 Hawai‘i at 96, 26 P.3d at 585 (noting that “the circuit court gave no curative instructions to the jury[]” insofar as it “overruled defense counsel’s objection[,]” thereby “plac[ing] its imprimatur upon the [prosecutor’s improper argument], risking the implication that it, too,” believed the improper argument, and “invit[ed] the jury to share in that belief”); Rogan, 91 Hawai‘i at 415, 984 P.2d at 1241 (noting that the failure to sustain the defendant’s objection and, consequently, the lack of curative instruction weighed in favor of the conclusion that prosecutorial misconduct was not harmless beyond a reasonable doubt); Meyer, 99 Hawai‘i at 172-73, 53 P.3d at 311-12 (recognizing that there “was no specific curative instruction given by the court in this case because the court overruled defense counsel’s objection”). Indeed, it confirmed the prosecution equating “gut feeling” with common sense. Citing the standard jury instruction on reasonable doubt but overruling the objection, as the court did in the instant case, does not suggest to the jury that the prosecutor’s argument was “contrary” to the instruction, but rather, that the objection was wrong, leaving in place the prosecutor’s improper remarks.

instructed to reject the DPA's entreaties. In that connection, the court's instruction that "pity, passion and prejudice have no play" in determining "reasonable doubt" was also insufficient to cure the misconduct because the instruction did "not relate[] to the prejudicial effects of the prosecutor's assertions" or "specifically address and correct the misstatements [] given."⁴² Espiritu, 117 Hawai'i at 143-44, 176 P.3d at 901-02.⁴³ Similarly, although Respondent noted that the court instructed the jury that statements or remarks made by counsel are not evidence, that instruction was not a "curative instruction" because the court overruled the objection and, moreover, "the specific misstatements in question have to do with law and not evidence." Id. at 143, 176 P.3d at 901 (emphasis omitted); see also id.

mistrial but struck the statement and told the jury to disregard the argument. Id. The trial court then instructed the jury as follows: "Ladies and gentlemen, at this time I am going to ask you to please disregard the prosecutor's last statement. And ask you to please disregard the prosecutor [sic] last statement." Id. (brackets in original).

⁴² The dissent maintains that the court's reference to the foregoing jury instruction "nullified" the prosecutor's "improper argument" that the jury could ignore the law, and "sufficiently addressed" the "prejudicial impact" of that argument. Dissenting opinion at 41. But the court sustained the "gut feeling" remark as the prosecution's "take on common sense." And inasmuch as the court did not overrule the prosecutor's "improper argument," the court could not have "nullified" such argument.

(where the prosecutor misstated the law by implying that an attempted manslaughter defense had additional elements not set forth in the statute, holding that, "[a]lthough the court did instruct the jury as to the elements of an attempted manslaughter defense, . . . [t]he jury was not disabused of this error" "[b]ecause [the defense's] objections to these arguments were overruled, [and] the jury would reasonably perceive that the misstatement of the law was not incorrect"). Here, the court's instruction simply did not address the DPA's misstatements.⁴⁴

Lastly, because the court did not state its reasons for twice instructing the jury on reasonable doubt, any suggestion by Respondent that the second instruction was "prophylactic," after an apparent two-day break in the proceedings, is nothing more than speculation. The second general instruction on reasonable doubt also did not specifically address the improper nature and prejudicial effects of the comments. Thus, "the second factor . . . weighs heavily in favor of [Petitioner]." Rogan, 91 Hawai'i at 415, 984 P.2d at 1241.

⁴⁴ Relying on cases from outside this jurisdiction, the dissent maintains that the test for the second prong should be whether "the entirety of the court's comments were sufficient to alleviate the prejudice caused by the prosecutor's improper remarks." Dissenting opinion at 47-49 (citing Rodriguez v. Peters, 63 F.3d 546, 559 (7th Cir. 1995); People v. Katzenberger, 101 Cal. Rptr. 122, 128 (Cal. Ct. App. 2009); Uvalle v. State, Nos. 05-98-0466-CR, 05-98-0467-CR, 05-98-00468-CR, 199 WL 592397, at *6 (Tex. Ct. App. Aug. 9, 1999) (not designated for publication); Morrison v. State, No. 05-94-01649-CR, 1997 WL 282232, at *4 (Tex. Ct. App. May 29, 1997) (not designated for publication)). With all due respect, the established and precedential test in this jurisdiction for this prong is whether a curative instruction was given, see cases cited supra, at 47-51, notwithstanding foreign decisions that conflict with our precedent.

C.

The third factor requires consideration of the strength or weakness of the evidence against Petitioner. Mainaauo, 117 Hawai'i at 252, 178 P.3d at 18. Although the medical examiner testified that decedent died as a result of a "traumatic subarachnoid hemorrhage" caused by an "assaultive blunt force injury to the head[,]""⁴⁵ physicians at the hospital who treated decedent concluded that the he had died from an aneurysm. The medical examiner offered an explanation for the different conclusions. However, a question as to the "unique"⁴⁶ injury resulting in decedent's death was raised in the evidence by the medical examiner. The medical examiner indicated that the injury was "unique" because, "usually, if somebody falls, . . . [that is] what's called [a] subdural hemorrhage[,]"" but decedent "didn't have any of that."

⁴⁵ According to the dissent, "the medical examiner's testimony provided strong support that Reuther's injury was caused by a punch that he did not anticipate." Dissenting opinion at 51. But there is nothing in the record indicating the medical examiner opined that decedent "did not anticipate" a punch. Id. Instead, the examiner stated that when a person expects to be hit, it is unlikely that the brain will suffer trauma, but even if it is unexpected and a "blow is not really hard," trauma can occur. The medical examiner testified that a "traumatic subarachnoid hemorrhage" occurs "mostly when [the impact is] unexpected[,]"" but "anything is possible[,]"" so the medical examiner could not definitively state that the injury "can never happen[]" when a victim does not expect a blow.

In addition, as previously noted, while Respondent's witnesses who had invited decedent to camp with them and observed the incident from a distance testified that Petitioner's action was unprovoked, there was contrary testimony. Reverio, who was standing next to Petitioner at the time of the incident, testified that after a disagreement, Reverio thought Petitioner and decedent "were going to fight" when Petitioner punched decedent once. Consequently, there was a dispute in the evidence as to what had occurred and whether Petitioner acted in self-defense.⁴⁷ Thus, the evidence in this case was not so overwhelming⁴⁸ as to "outweigh" the effect of the misconduct and ⁴⁷ The dissent focuses on the testimony of two witnesses, to the exclusion of Reverio's testimony. See dissenting opinion at 47. Reverio's testimony contradicted the testimony of Kaeo and Ako. Further, we do not dispute the medical examiner's testimony, see dissenting opinion at 50-51. However, as stated, the hospital believed decedent's cause of death was an aneurysm.

⁴⁸ As opposed to the dissent's position that the evidence must be only "very strong[,]" dissenting opinion at 46-47 (citing State v. Klinge, 92 Hawai'i 577, 593, 994 P.2d 509, 525 (2000), "overwhelming" evidence is the precedential standard by which to assess the strength of the evidence against a defendant. See Tuua, 125 Hawai'i at 17, 250 P.3d at 280 ("[T]he strength of the evidence was not overwhelming and the credibility of the witnesses' versions of events was the pivotal issue at trial."); Mainaupo, 117 Hawai'i at 255, 178 P.3d at 21 ("[W]e think that the evidence in this case is not so overwhelming that we are convinced that the DPA's intrusion into [the defendant's] right to remain silent may not have contributed to his conviction."); see also Wakisaka, 102 Hawai'i at 516, 78 P.3d at 329 ("In short, the evidence was not so overwhelming that we are convinced the prosecution's intrusion on [the defendant's] rights under article I, section 10 of the Hawai'i Constitution may not have contributed to [the defendant's] conviction."); Pacheco, 96 Hawai'i at 87, 26 P.3d at 586 ("[W]e cannot say that the evidence against [the defendant] was so overwhelming as to render the DPA's personal disparagements of him and vigorous and improper attack on his credibility harmless beyond a reasonable doubt."); Rogan, 91 Hawai'i at 415, 984 P.2d at 1241 ("[I]t can hardly be said that the case against [the defendant], which hinged on the credibility of the Complainant, was so overwhelming as to outweigh the inflammatory effect of the deputy prosecutor's comments."); State v. Knight, 80 Hawai'i 318, 327, 909 P.2d 1133, 1142 (1996) (continued...)

to render the DPA's improper comments harmless beyond a reasonable doubt, as previously noted.⁴⁹ Shabazz, 98 Hawai'i at 382, 48 P.3d at 629; cf. Pacheco, 96 Hawai'i at 83, 26 P.3d at 586 ("[W]e cannot say that the evidence against [the defendant] was so overwhelming as to render the DPA's personal

("In regard to the third factor, the strength or weakness of the evidence against the defendant, the evidence against [the defendant], as described above, is overwhelming."); State v. Samuel, 74 Haw. 141, 149, 838 P.2d 1374, 1379 (1994) ("Furthermore, there was overwhelming evidence in the record to support the . . . verdict beyond a reasonable doubt[.]"); State v. Shabazz, 98 Hawai'i 358, 382, 48 P.3d 605, 629 (App. 2002) ("Hence, like the supreme court in Rogan, we cannot conclude that the case against [the defendants], which hinged on the credibility of the Complainant, was so overwhelming as to outweigh the inflammatory effect of the deputy prosecutor's comments.") (Internal citation and quotation marks omitted); State v. Schmidt, 84 Hawai'i 191, 203, 932 P.2d 328, 340 (App. 1997) ("Thus, in light of the overwhelming evidence of [the d]efendant's guilt, we conclude that those of the prosecutor's comments which were improper were harmless beyond a reasonable doubt."). Klinge is distinguishable. Klinge focused on whether the misconduct prejudicially affected the defendant's substantial rights under plain error review; it did not, as here, analyze whether the error was harmless beyond a reasonable doubt such that vacation is warranted. Id. at 593, 994 P.2d at 525 ("[I]n light of the nature of the prosecutor's statement, the failure of defense counsel to object, and the strength of the evidence against [the defendant], we hold that any error . . . by the prosecutor did not prejudicially affect Klinge's substantial rights.") (Emphasis added.). Thus, contrary to the dissent's position, Klinge cannot be relied upon for the proposition that the evidence need not be overwhelming in ascertaining whether the misconduct is harmless beyond a reasonable doubt.

disparagements of him and vigorous and improper attack on his credibility harmless beyond a reasonable doubt.")⁵⁰

The prosecutor's remarks brought the jury instructions into disrepute, and uncorrected, such remarks "seriously affect the fairness, integrity, [and] . . . public reputation of [the] judicial proceedings," Nichols, 111 Hawai'i at 334, 141 P.3d at 981. Hence, based on these three factors, "there is a reasonable possibility[, then,] that [the DPA's improper remarks] might have contributed to [Petitioner's] conviction," Duncan, 101 Hawai'i at 278, 67 P.3d at 777, and the ICA gravely erred in concluding that ⁵⁰ The dissent reaches the opposite conclusion by arguing the evidence demonstrated that Petitioner was "reckless" and did not act in self defense. Dissenting opinion at 47-48. According to the dissent, this evidence consisted of two "independent" witnesses who stated that the attack was unprovoked and unexpected and that Petitioner was under the influence of methamphetamine, the medical examiner who testified that the injury resulted from a punch that decedent did not anticipate, (this is rebutted supra), and an "independent witness" who testified that Petitioner was larger than decedent. Id. at 47.

First, there is no "overwhelming evidence" of recklessness, for the reasons previously stated. Additionally, the two witnesses who believed Petitioner to be under the influence of methamphetamine, by their own admission, were under the influence of drugs themselves. Harold Kaeo had smoked marijuana and had a shot of alcohol, and Nicole Ako stated that she was "high on crystal methamphetamine." In any event, Petitioner's physical size, alleged drug use, and the testimony of two witnesses apparently under the influence of drugs themselves, would not present "overwhelming and compelling," State v. Toyomura, 80 Hawai'i 8, 27, 904 P.2d 893, 912 (1995), evidence of recklessness that could be concluded, outweighed the prejudice engendered by the prosecutor's comments in final argument. In light of other evidence that the injury was "unique" and Reveiro's testimony regarding self defense that is part of the record, the improper comments cannot be deemed harmless.

Second, as to the dissent's statement that the foregoing evidence showed Petitioner did not act in self defense, aside from Reveiro's testimony, Petitioner's "subjective[] belie[f,]" Augustin, 101 Hawai'i at 128, 63 P.3d at 1098, as to the circumstances regarding the use of force, would have had to be considered by the jury. However, a reason Petitioner did not testify was the court's erroneous ruling on admission of the juvenile evidence.

"the statements of the DPA were harmless beyond a reasonable doubt[,]” Schnabel, 2010 WL 4546655, at *4.⁵¹

XIII.

In sum, the dissent maintains that judicial notice may not be taken of HRS § 571-84(1); only plain error review is permissible, plain error review should not be granted with respect to the applicability of HRS § 571-84(1), and the prosecutor’s remarks in final argument were harmless. Specifically, the dissent asserts, (1) pursuant to HRE Rule 103, Petitioner waived the argument that HRS § 571-84 precluded admission of the juvenile evidence by failing to specifically object on the ground that the admission of such evidence was barred by HRS § 571-84, dissenting opinion at 3, 9-10; (2) HRE 202(b) does not allow this court to take notice of Petitioner’s “potential objection,” id. at 3, 9; (3) the “argument” that HRS § 571-84 precluded admission of the evidence is not noticeable as plain error, id. at 3, 26-31; (4) the court did not violate HRS §

571-84(h), id. at 32-38; and (5) the prosecutor's closing argument was improper, but was cured by the court's instructions to the jury, id. at 38-51.⁵²

XIV.

The dissent's first argument that Petitioner "waived" any "argument" pertaining to HRS § 571-84(h) is incomplete. HRE Rule 103(a)(1) provides that "[e]rror may not be predicated upon a ruling which admits or excludes evidence unless a substantial right of the party is affected, and[,] "[i]n case the ruling is one admitting evidence, a timely objection or motion to strike appears of record, stating the specific ground of objection, if the specific ground was not apparent from the context[.]"

(Emphasis added.)

To reiterate, at trial, Petitioner sought to prevent Respondent from admitting Dr. Camara's testimony, arguing that such evidence was not relevant, and that its probative value was substantially outweighed by the risk of prejudice. Consequently, and plainly, Petitioner did not "waive" his objection to the admissibility of the juvenile evidence.⁵³ Seemingly, the ⁵² Because this argument was addressed in footnotes accompanying the analysis of prosecutorial misconduct, see supra, it is not discussed further.

dissent's disagreement with this opinion, at least with respect to objections, comes down to its belief that Petitioner was not precise enough in objecting to the admission, of Dr. Camara's testimony. See dissenting opinion at 3, 9-10. "Case law from our state indicates . . . that the purpose of requiring a specific objection is to inform the trial court of the error." State v. Long, 98 Hawai'i 348, 353, 48 P.3d 595, 600 (2002).

However, Long explained that an appellate court will "consider a meritorious objection not voiced to the trial judge" when "the ground for exclusion should have been obvious to [the] judge and opposing counsel[,]" 98 Hawai'i at 354, 48 P.3d at 601 (internal quotation marks, citation, and emphasis omitted) (emphasis added). Although Petitioner did not specifically raise HRS § 571-84(h), its applicability should have been "apparent from the context[,]" HRE Rule 103(a)(1) of Petitioner's objection.⁵⁴

Applying Long's rationale, the ground for exclusion in HRS § 571-84 should have been obvious. Id.⁵⁵

⁵⁵ The dissent states that based on Petitioner's objection in this case, the applicability of HRS § 571-84 would not be "apparent or obvious" to the court. Dissenting opinion at 10 n.5. To the contrary, the proposition that juvenile evidence may not be used against the minor in subsequent criminal proceedings has been well established in this jurisdiction. See HRS § (continued...)

XV.

The dissent's second argument suggests that HRE Rule 202(b) does not allow this court to take judicial notice of HRS § 571-84. According to the dissent, "the doctrine of judicial notice does not provide an alternative basis for an appellate court to address [the] issue" of whether the use of evidence from Petitioner's juvenile proceedings was barred by HRS § 571-84, or "to address a potential objection to the admissibility of evidence which was not raised below."⁵⁶ Dissenting opinion at 3; see also dissenting opinion at 14-25. With all due respect, the dissent confuses the concepts of judicial notice and plain error. Indisputably, judicial notice does not allow a court to take notice of a "potential objection" or of error.⁵⁷ Id. Judicial notice, however, does allow this court to take notice of a

571-84; see also Nobriga, 56 Haw. at 77, 527 P.2d at 1271; Riveira, 92 Hawai'i 521, 993 P.2d 555.

⁵⁶ We apply the neutral principle that a court should take judicial notice of a law that is directly and obviously applicable and plainly controlling. It is error for the court not to do so, without regard to whether the prosecution or defendant would benefit by judicial notice. See e.g., West, 95 Hawai'i at 26-27, 18 P.3d 884, 888-89 (holding that the trial court must take judicial notice of the speed schedules, even where judicial notice is not "expressly requested by counsel[,] and the speed limits properly noticed constitutes sufficient evidence in support of the prosecution's case).

statute, here, HRS § 571-84, even though it was not raised below.⁵⁸

As mentioned, West construed HRE Rule 202(b) as allowing courts of this state to take judicial notice of statutes even if not "expressly requested by counsel." 95 Hawai'i at 27, 18 P.3d at 889. Moreover, Life of the Land, 61 Haw. at 418-19, 606 P.2d at 884-85, Eli v. State, 63 Haw. 474, 480, 630 P.2d 113, 115 (1981), Demond v. Univ. of Hawaii, 54 Haw. 98, 102-04, 503 P.2d 434, 437-38 (1972), establish this court's power to take judicial notice of enactments such as HRS § 571-84 not raised by the parties at trial.

In West, the defendant was charged with speeding, and during trial, the prosecution asked the circuit court to take judicial notice of ordinances establishing the speed limit to prove that the defendant's speed was in excess of the limit. 95 Hawai'i at 24, 27, 18 P.3d at 886, 889. On appeal, this court observed that HRE Rule 202(b) requires the courts to take judicial notice of the content of the applicable ordinances even when not expressly requested by counsel. Id. at 26-27, 18 P.3d at 888-89.

⁵⁸ The dissent asserts that judicial notice "establishes rules for determining how courts can ascertain the content of the law." Dissenting opinion at 3 (emphasis omitted). We do not take issue with this. However, HRE Rule 202 also presumes that "courts are at liberty to discover and apply the law, whatever its source, to the issues at hand." Manual on the Hawai'i Rules of Evidence § 202-2 (Supp. 2011) (emphasis added).

In Life of the Land, the plaintiffs, who opposed the construction of a high rise condominium building, referred to the "Kakaako Ordinance," an ordinance that was to control development, 61 Haw. at 394, 606 P.2d at 871, as "[s]ui generis" and "the only ordinance of its kind[,] "id. at 417-18, 606 P.2d at 884. However, this court took judicial notice of twenty-five other ordinances, despite the fact that only two were in the appellate record, to explain the City and County of Honolulu's land development and procedure, and to reject the plaintiffs' assertion that the approval of development was invalid. Id. at 422, 606 P.2d at 886. The parties had not asked the court to review those ordinances, nor had they discussed the ordinances in their briefs. Id. at 416, 418, 419, 606 P.2d at 883, 884, 885.⁵⁹

In Eli, also instructive, the defendant sought post-conviction relief pursuant to HRPP Rule 40, arguing, inter alia, that his guilty plea was not made knowingly, intentionally, and voluntarily. 63 Haw. at 480, 630 P.2d at 115 (1981). As to the foregoing claim, Eli noted that this court must “look at the entire record in order to determine whether the [defendant’s] claims or recantation are credible and worthy of belief.” Id. at 477, 630 P.2d at 116. “A silent record or a minimal record places the burden on the State to prove waiver.” Id. at 477, 478, 630 P.2d at 116. But the record of the proceeding in which the defendant entered his plea was never submitted into evidence during the Rule 40 proceedings.” Id. at 478, 630 P.2d at 116.

Eli stated that “[o]rordinarily, matters not presented to the trial court may not be considered by the appellate court on appeal.” Id. Eli declared, however, that “[w]here the equity of the situation dictates, we will use our discretion to take judicial notice of matters of which courts may properly take judicial notice but which are not part of the record on appeal.” Id. (emphasis added). This court took judicial notice of the transcript of the proceeding in which the defendant had pleaded guilty and determined that the defendant’s plea was made voluntarily and intelligently.⁶⁰ See id. We conclude in line with Eli that "equity . . . dictates" notice of HRS § 571-84 under the circumstances of this case.

⁶⁰ The dissent suggests that Eli took judicial notice on appeal because it was an HRPP Rule 40 petition and, thus, required the circuit court

In Demond, the plaintiff challenged the denial by the Labor and Industrial Relations Appeal Board (Board) of her workmen's compensation claim against the University of Hawai'i (UH), for injuries incurred ten years earlier while she was employed by UH, but working in California. 54 Haw. at 99, 503 P.2d at 435. The plaintiff argued on appeal that although she had not given notice to UH of her injuries sooner, UH failed to disclose the existence and availability of workmen's compensation benefits as required by California law. Id. at 102, 503 P.2d at 437.

This court noted Demond neither argued that California law applied nor indicated a desire to take advantage of California law in the proceedings below. Id. at 102-03, 503 P.2d at 437. Demond said that "[w]e have held in numerous cases that this court on appeal will not consider issues beyond those that are properly raised in the trial court[,]"" and applied that principle to workmen's compensation proceedings. Id. at 103, 503 P.2d at 437. Demond acknowledged, however, that this court had the "power to take judicial notice of applicable foreign law, or to look at the entire record. Dissenting opinion at 21-22. But Eli's decision to take judicial notice of a "matter[] not presented to the trial court," by its own language, hinged on taking judicial notice "where equity of the situation dictates," 63 Haw. at 478, 630 P.2d at 116.

to remand for its application[.]” Id. at 103, 503 P.2d at 437-38 (citing HRS § 623-1 (repealed 1980).)⁶¹

Despite the dissent’s argument that these prior cases are “factually distinguishable[,]” dissenting opinion at 19, the cases establish the principle that this court may take judicial notice on appeal, even for substantive purposes. See West, 95 Hawai‘i at 27, 18 P.3d at 889, Life of the Land, 61 Haw. at 418-22, 606 P.2d at 884-86, Eli, 63 Haw. at 476-78, 630 P.2d at 115-16, and Demond, 54 Haw. at 103, 503 P.2d at 437-38.⁶² Taking judicial notice of HRS § 571-84 is appropriate and necessary because the applicability of HRS § 571-84 was direct and obvious,

⁶¹ HRS § 623-1 provided:

§ 623-1 Judicial notice of common law, state laws, and other statutes; ruling reviewable. Every court of this State shall take judicial notice of the common law and statutes of every state, territory, and other jurisdiction of the United States. The court may inform itself of such laws in such manner as it may deem proper, and the court may call upon counsel to aid it in obtaining information. The determination of such laws shall be made by the court and not by the jury, and shall be reviewable.

This case is unlike Demond. In this case, Petitioner did not “affirmatively argue” at trial, id. at 103, 503 P.2d at 438, that HRS § 571-84 was inapplicable, or that the evidence given in his juvenile proceedings was admissible. Rather, Petitioner consistently maintained that such evidence was inadmissible. Moreover, in Demond, the plaintiff sought application of foreign law that was not directly and obviously applicable and plainly controlling. But we hold that judicial notice of HRS § 571-84 is controlling in light of the facts of this case.

and the statute plainly controlled in light of the facts of this case. In that regard, waiver of any "argument" by the parties has no relevance. See, e.g., Stenger, 122 Hawai'i at 282, 226 P.3d at 452.⁶³ Thus, the court erred in failing to take notice of HRS § 571-84 and, hence, we take notice of the statute.⁶⁴

Next, the dissent states that HRS § 571-84 is "analytically indistinguishable" from the HRE and, hence, under our holding, trial courts must sua sponte consider all sources of law identified in HRE Rule 202(b), including the HRE since it is codified by statute. Dissenting opinion at 12-13, 14. We do not so hold. First, HRS § 571-84 is not a rule of evidence. A narrow construction of HRS § 571-84(h) as solely relating to the admissibility of evidence would be wrong. See id. at 14. HRS § 571-84(h) establishes, by statute, a state policy, as explained supra, of excluding certain juvenile proceedings from subsequent legal cases in order to protect and rehabilitate juveniles.

Moreover, the dissent's view that this opinion requires trial and appellate courts to notice all errors grounded in one of the sources of law identified in HRE Rule 202, without regard to whether substantial rights were affected, id. at 15, is mistaken. This opinion quite clearly does not require courts to “notice any error, even those that do not implicate substantial rights.” Id. (emphasis in original). Where, as in this case, the court fails to notice a statute that obviously and undeniably governs, the failure of which has affected the substantial rights of a defendant, this court will apply the statute and vacate for the court’s error.

⁶³ HRE Rule 103(a) does not govern when, or under what circumstances, this court may take judicial notice of a statute.

XVI.

The dissent’s third argument is that the court’s error in failing to apply HRS § 571-84(h) is not noticeable for plain error because (1) “objections”⁶⁵ to the admission of incompetent evidence that the defense failed to raise at trial are “generally” not subject to plain error review, id. at 27, and (2) defendant’s right to testify was not implicated in this case, id. at 29. Because we indicate that plain error may be an alternative ground for vacation, respectfully, we respond to what appears to be the dissent's wrong view of the plain error rule.

A.

In tandem with the "purpose" of any "waiver rule[]" is the obligation to follow the law to ensure fairness and justice.⁶⁶ See State v. Moriwake, 65 Haw. 47, 55, 647 P.2d 705, 712 (1982) (noting that the "inherent power of the court is . . . the power to administer justice"). It is evident that in any scenario, this court may notice errors affecting a defendant's substantial rights, such as in this case. This is true even where the error may be related to the admissibility of evidence. See State v. Pastushin, 58 Haw. 299, 302, 568 P.2d 504, 506 (1977) (stating that "where inadmissible hearsay is so prejudicial as to deprive the defendant of his constitutional right to a fair trial, its admission will constitute ground for reversal, although defense counsel has failed to object"); cf. State v. Grindles, 70 Haw. 528, 530, 777 P.2d 1187, 1189 (1989) (noting for plain error, the "trial court's action in compelling [the defendant] to put on his evidence prior to the conclusion of the State's evidence[,]" because such error "violated his due process right to a fair trial"). Under the facts and circumstances of the cases cited to by the dissent,⁶⁷ the defendants' substantial rights were not affected, and therefore, plain error did not apply. On the other hand, in the instant case, the court's erroneous ruling infringed upon Petitioner's right to testify.

⁶⁶ It should be noted that the dissent maintains this court may not take judicial notice of HRS § 571-84, and the court's failure to apply HRS § 571-84(h) is not noticeable for plain error. The result is that the bar in HRS § 571-84(h) would be negated. Respectfully, the dissent's position would result in this court being complicit in a violation of HRS § 571-84(h).

In fact, plain error review does apply to erroneous evidentiary rulings that affect a defendant's substantial rights. In State v. Santiago, 53 Haw. 254, 261, 492 P.2d 657, 662 (1971), this court examined whether the prosecution's introduction of the defendant's prior convictions to impeach his credibility violated the defendant's constitutional right to testify in his own defense. Concluding that it did, and, thus, that plain error review was appropriate, this court emphasized that it was "concern[ed]" that admission of prior convictions would "compel [the defendant] to forego his privilege to testify." Id. at 260, 492 P.2d at 661.⁶⁸ Similarly, in the instant case, the court's ruling "compel[led Petitioner] to forego" testifying insofar as he expressly stated that he did not testify in part due to the court's ruling, thereby infringing upon his "substantial right" to testify.⁶⁹

⁶⁷ State v. Wallace, 80 Hawai'i 382, 410, 910 P.2d 695, 723 (1996) and State v. Uyesugi, 100 Hawai'i 442, 463-64, 60 P.3d 843, 864-65 (2002).

Additionally, State v. Cummings, 49 Haw. 522, 528, 423 P.2d 438, 442 (1967), demonstrates that evidentiary rulings, if affecting a defendant's substantial rights, can be reviewed for plain error. There, the defendant was convicted, after a jury-waived trial, of robbery in the second degree. Id. at 522, 423 P.2d at 440. At trial, a detective testified that, subsequent to his arrest, the defendant told the detective that he was "look[ing] for trouble with haoles[.]" Id. at 525, 423 P.2d at 441. There was no objection to the detective's testimony. The circuit court "sua sponte" addressed whether it could consider the oral statement in light of the fact that a statement elicited by police during an interrogation cannot be used against the defendant, if the defendant had requested and had been denied an opportunity to consult with a lawyer. Id. at 526, 423 P.2d at 441.

This court, noting that "the alleged error" could be a "matter not raised[]" insofar as "the question of the admissibility of defendant's damaging statement [was] not properly presented for the trial judge's ruling, nor specified as error in this appeal," nevertheless reviewed for plain error because the "[e]rroneous admission of evidence may constitute plain error if a fair trial of the accused was thereby impaired, or if it substantially prejudiced the accused." Id. at 528, 423 P.2d at 442 (internal quotation marks, citations, and parentheses omitted). In the instant case, as recounted, the erroneous ruling that would admit improper evidence affected Petitioner's substantial right to testify.⁷⁰ See Domingo, 69 Haw. at 70, 733 P.2d at 692 (stating that, where "the introduction of the evidence in question [is] prohibited by statute, it constitute[s] plain error and is noticeable by this court").

As to (2), the dissent disagrees that Petitioner's right to testify was infringed upon, emphasizing that (a) the court's ruling was subject to change, (b) Petitioner could have testified and refrained from asserting that he did not know a single punch would cause a substantial risk of death, and (c) the court's ruling was "'one of the factors'" contributing to Petitioner's decision not to testify. Dissenting opinion 31.

As to (a), the court's in limine ruling was not subject to change insofar as the court ruled that it would allow the cross-examination and later reconfirmed its ruling after the prosecution had rested its case. The court stated that it would "give latitude[]" to the prosecution to discuss the issue, over the defense's "objection[,]" and explained that it "would allow" on cross-examination the question whether Petitioner knew that one punch "could" cause death. After defense counsel stated that Petitioner did not testify in part because Respondent would be allowed to introduce Dr. Camara's testimony, the court acknowledged that Petitioner's statement was "accurate" and that it would "allow [the prosecutor] to get into the earlier [juvenile] situation[,]" thereby reconfirming that the court would have allowed the admission of such evidence if Petitioner testified. Thus, the ruling did not change. See U.S. v. Greer, 791 F.2d 590, 594 (7th Cir. 1986) (reviewing the error of an in limine ruling even where the defendant failed to testify because there was a complete record insofar as the legal, not factual, "determinative question[]" was "whether a confession elicited in violation of a defendant's [F]ifth [A]mendment rights may ever be used for impeachment purposes").

As to (b), respectfully, criticism in response to the Supreme Court's decision in Luce v. United States, 469 U.S. 38, 41-43 (1984), highlights the flaw in the dissent's reasoning. In Luce, the Supreme Court held that a defendant must testify to preserve his or her right to appeal a trial court's in limine ruling that prior convictions are admissible for impeachment purposes. 469 U.S. 38, 40-42 (1984). "Luce has been subjected to little but steady and unrelenting criticism[.]" James Joseph Duane, Appellate Review of In Limine Rulings, 182 F.R.D. 666 (1999). One criticism of Luce, out of many, is that it "forces upon an accused what is arguably an unfair choice; testify under circumstances where it is virtually certain the prosecutor will regale the jury with tales of prior convictions, or refrain from testifying, deprive the jury of the accused's side of the story, and lose all chance to appeal." 28 Charles Alan Wright, et al., Federal Practice and Procedure: Evidence § 6119 at 123 n.49 (1st ed. 1993). Since Luce, the Supreme Court has formally settled into the position that a defendant has a right to testify in his own behalf, Rock v. Arkansas, 483 U.S. 44, 49-51 (1987), and "[i]n a host of other contexts, . . . has held that a constitutional right may be violated, even where the accused is not strictly forbidden from exercising that right, as long as some trial ruling undermines the right by improperly and unfairly making its exercise costly[,]" Duane, Appellate Review of In Limine Rulings, 182 F.R.D. 666 (emphasis added) (internal quotation marks omitted). Indeed, requiring the defendant to testify in order to preserve the issue for appeal is wrong, since it fails to recognize "the significance that such impeachment has on the defendant's decision concerning the testimony." Paul F. Rothstein, Federal Rules of Evidence: A Fresh Review and Evaluation, 120 F.R.D. 299, 363 (1987).

States declining to adopt Luce have reasoned that the problem of meaningful review is unfounded when the record sufficiently demonstrates, through an offer of proof, the nature of the defendant's proposed testimony and that the defendant refrained from testifying when faced with impeachment by a prior conviction. Under such conditions, a reviewing court would have a sufficient record to conduct a harmless error analysis.

Warren v. State, 124 P.3d 522, 527 (Nev. 2005) (emphases added).

In the instant case, it would be unwise to "apply" a rule that, in effect compelled Petitioner to make an "unfair choice" of either testifying under circumstances where it was "virtually certain" the prosecutor would "regale the jury" with Dr. Camara's testimony, or remain silent and "deprive the jury" of his testimony and "lose all chance of appeal." 28 Charles Alan Wright, et al., supra, § 6119 at 123 n.49. Of course, as noted previously, HRS § 571-84 bars the admission of evidence from a juvenile proceeding in the instant case, precluding any effort to "regale the jury" with Dr. Camara's testimony, further underscoring the inapplicability of Luce's rationale to this case.

As to (c), as discussed supra, Petitioner's testimony was critical to his claim of self-defense insofar as the defense is based on the defendant's subjective belief and state of mind with respect to the facts and circumstances surrounding his or her use of force. Although the effect of the court's ruling on Petitioner's decision not to testify cannot be measured with precision, any error that infringes on a substantial right such as the right to testify may be noticed for plain error. See Staley, 91 Hawai'i at 286, 982 P.2d at 915 ("Because the circuit court's error infringed upon [the defendant's] constitutional right to testify, we address it as plain error") (emphasis added); see also Wakisaka, 102 Hawai'i at 515, 516, 78 P.3d 317, at 329).

XVII.

The dissent's fourth argument that the court's ruling was not in violation of HRS § 571-84, maintains that (1) no appellate court has ruled on whether HRS § 571-84 "precludes a defendant's cross-examination regarding juvenile matters in order to rebut testimony by the defendant which the State argues was false or misleading[,]" dissenting opinion at 32; (2) "other state courts" have recognized that a defendant may not use "similar statutes to shelter such testimony from adversarial testing," id.; (3) the court's ruling was "contingent on [Petitioner] 'opening the door'" by testifying that he did not know that one punch could kill, id. at 36; and (4) in the in limine ruling the court "offered the option of introducing the relevant evidence without reference to the adjudication or its result[,]" id. at 37.⁷¹

A.

As to (1), respectfully, HRS § 571-84 plainly and unambiguously provides that such evidence may not be used "for any purpose" whatsoever. Nobriga and Riveira I & II have already directly confirmed that evidence, or what the dissent refers to as "juvenile matters[,]" dissenting opinion at 32, from a juvenile proceeding are inapplicable in any adversary proceeding. Nevertheless, the dissent contends that Nobriga did not deal with the question of whether "and to what extent evidence from prior juvenile adjudications was admissible at trial[,]" but held that "such evidence" was available for use in sentencing. Id. at 32 n.15. But Nobriga expressly stated that the juvenile evidence is inadmissible in an "adversary proceeding." 56 Haw. at 79, 527 P.2d at 1272. In that regard, it expressly "ruled" on the issue of "whether" evidence from prior juvenile adjudications was admissible, see dissenting opinion at 32, and concluded that it was not.

⁷¹ Luce, see supra, is persuasive as to the dissent's fourth argument which is therefore, not addressed further.

Riveira I & II also confirmed that the subject evidence is inadmissible in a criminal trial. In that case, this court adopted the analysis set out in the Riveira I dissent, including that portion of the dissent stating that, pursuant to HRS § 571-1, any evidence used in juvenile law violation proceedings "cannot be offered as evidence for any purpose whatever [] in any court[,]” Riveira I, 92 Hawai'i at 559, 993 P.2d at 593 (Acoba, J., dissenting) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted) (brackets in original).⁷²

B.

As to (2), despite the controlling precedent from this jurisdiction flatly prohibiting the use of the challenged evidence, the dissent looks to three cases from outside this jurisdiction for support, suggesting that such evidence may be admissible. See dissenting opinion at 32-36. With all due respect, the dissent's reliance on such cases overlooks the ⁷² According to the dissent, Riveira II's holding that "a juvenile adjudication" may not be treated as a "conviction for purposes of applying a repeat offender sentencing statute[,]” makes it distinguishable from the instant case. Dissenting opinion at 32 n.15. But the ICA dissent's reasoning in Riveira I, that was adopted in Riveira II, is directly applicable. There, because the express language of HRS § 571-1 provides that no adjudication by the family court shall be deemed a conviction, such an adjudication could not be treated as a conviction. Riveira I, 92 Hawai'i at 559, 993 P.2d at 593; see Riveira II, 92 Hawai'i at 523-24, 993 P.2d at 556-57 (adopting dissent's observation in Riveira I that treating a juvenile adjudication as a criminal conviction is violative of the provisions in HRS chapter 571 and a rejection of the family court system). Similarly, HRS § 571-84 expressly prohibits the admission of evidence from a juvenile proceeding for any purpose whatsoever, and, "in the absence of any specific language in a statute to the contrary," Riveira I, 92 Hawai'i at 559, 993 P.2d at 593, HRS § 571-84(h) "control[s,]" id.

fundamental fact that HRS § 571-84(h) mandates the exclusion of such evidence, despite what may be culled from the law of other jurisdictions. Moreover, two of the three cases cited are not contrary,⁷³ and the third case, State v. Rodriguez, 612 P.2d 484,

In addition, the dissent states that Lineback suggests that "an entirely different principle of law' arguably prevails if a defendant gives false or misleading testimony.'" Dissenting opinion at 35 n.16 (quoting Lineback, 301 N.E.2d at 637). First, Lineback more specifically stated that "an entirely different principle of law prevails when a defendant directly places his reputation in the community before the jury through character witnesses." 301 N.E.2d at 637. Elaborating on that "different principle of law[,] "id. Lineback explained that, "[w]hen a defendant tenders his supposed good character in evidence, he thereby invites scrutiny and disclosure of specific instances of his misconduct to depreciate the weight of the testimony of his character witness, although the answers elicited may incidentally impute to him other guilt.'" Id. (quoting Jordan v. State, 110 N.E.2d 751, 753 (1953)). Lineback explained, "[a]lthough juvenile matters are secret and the results thereof not open to public scrutiny as a general proposition, a defendant who places his reputation before the jury through character witnesses opens his entire life to scrutiny." Even if this jurisdiction had adopted a similar exception to the prohibition set forth in HRS § 571-84(h), such exception would not be implicated under the facts of this case. Petitioner did not "directly place[] his reputation in the community" thereby opening "his entire life to scrutiny." Id. Lineback is thus inapposite.

Also, subsequent to Lineback, the Indiana Supreme Court determined that such questioning "is proper only as a means of testing the witness' actual knowledge of the defendant's general reputation in the community, and not as a means of discrediting the defendant or of proving the truth of the assertion." Randolph v. State, 378 N.E.2d 828, 833 (Ind. 1978) (emphasis added). Insofar as the instant case did not involve the attempted admission of evidence as a means of testing a character witness's "actual knowledge" of reputation evidence, Lineback is inapplicable.

In State v. Marinski, 41 N.E.2d 387, 388 (1942), "the defendant[,] upon his own insistence and over the prosecuting attorney's objection[,]" testified as to how he spent the previous years of his life, but failed to mention that he was incarcerated for juvenile delinquency. (Emphasis added). The prosecutor, on cross-examination, asked about this part of the defendant's history. The Ohio court relied heavily on the fact that because the "defendant himself" "insisted upon narrating the story of his

486 (Ariz. 1980), which the dissent maintains is "particularly instructive[,] " dissenting opinion at 34, is in fact inapposite. There, the Arizona court held that "juvenile records" are admissible when "the defendant presents favorable evidence regarding his juvenile history[.]" 612 P.2d at 487.

The Arizona court was applying a statute, unlike the one in the instant case, that provided in pertinent part that "[t]he disposition of a child in the juvenile court may not be used against the child in any case or proceeding in any court other than a juvenile court[.]" Id. at 486 (emphasis added). The dissent concedes that the Arizona statute is narrower than HRS § 571-84 insofar as it does not prohibit "[e]vidence given previous years[," the prosecutor could question the defendant about the testimony. Contrary to the dissent's suggestion, see dissenting opinion at 35, in this case, Petitioner did not "insist upon narrating the story of his previous years." Marinski, 41 N.E.2d at 388. In fact, Petitioner "insist[ed] that there be no mention of his "previous years." Id.

Furthermore, Malone v. State, 200 N.E. 473, 477 (1936), which was discussed in Marinski, is directly applicable to this case. There, the prosecutor asked the defendant if he had "wrecked a railroad train[," which was a "matter[" "disposed of" in juvenile court. Id. The Ohio Supreme Court explained that the "defendant was being examined as to matters which had been the subject of proceedings in the juvenile court," id. at 478, and held that the questioning was improper inasmuch as "the law prohibits the use of juvenile court proceedings, or of proof developed thereon, against a child in any other court to discredit him or to mark him as one possessing a criminal history[," id. (emphases added).

Similarly, in the instant case, the prosecutor would have questioned Petitioner about "matters[," i.e., Dr. Camara's testimony, that were "developed" in a prior juvenile proceeding, to "discredit" Petitioner, and, thus, the evidence was inadmissible. Although the dissent attempts to distinguish Malone, see dissenting opinion at 35-36 n.17, noting that the prosecutor in that case pointed to several matters in the defendant's juvenile proceedings, Malone's decision did not hinge on the number of "matters which had been the subject of proceedings in the juvenile court." Id. at 452. The reference to a single matter from those proceedings would have been improper under Malone. Likewise, under HRS § 571-84(h), the use of any evidence from a defendant's juvenile proceedings is plainly prohibited.

in" juvenile proceedings, HRS § 571-84(h), but maintains that the "reasoning" applies because Rodriguez stands for the proposition that even a seemingly absolute bar on the admission of juvenile evidence must yield to competing concerns on occasion.

Dissenting opinion at 35-36 n.19. However, unlike HRS § 571-84(h), the statute at issue in Rodriguez did not expressly provide that the disposition of the minor in the juvenile court may not be used against the minor "for any purpose whatever[.]" In view of the foregoing statutory language in HRS § 571-84(h), the dissent's approach would run counter to the express directive in the statute.

C.

In connection with (3), the dissent maintains that the ruling was "contingent on" Petitioner "opening the door" on direct examination by testifying that he did not know that one punch could kill. Dissenting opinion at 36. According to the dissent, because Dr. Camara stated that "a punch and some kicks carried a substantial risk of death[,]" it would be reasonable that Petitioner "should have known" that a single unexpected punch also carried such a risk. Id.

Respectfully, this is wrong. Initially, inasmuch as HRS § 571-84(h) expressly prohibits the admission of evidence, irrespective of the substance of his testimony, Petitioner could not "open" any "door" that would have admitted the evidence from the prior juvenile proceeding. Despite the court's ruling, such evidence was barred.⁷⁴ See Nobriga, 56 Haw. at 79, 527 P.2d at 1272 (expressly stating that the evidence is inadmissible in an "adversary proceeding"); cf. Santiago, 53 Haw. at 260, 492 P.2d at 661 ("[T]o convict a criminal defendant where prior crimes have been introduced to impeach his credibility as a witness violates the accused's constitutional right to testify in his own defense."). HRS § 571-84(h) establishes a state policy that evidence in a family court juvenile proceeding is inadmissible in any adversary proceeding in other courts because the core purposes of juvenile proceedings are to protect and rehabilitate the juvenile.

In any event, realistically, Petitioner would not have "opened the door"⁷⁵ to the use of the juvenile evidence on direct

⁷⁵ "Opening the door" has been defined as where "the party introduces evidence or takes some action that makes admissible evidence that would have examination. It was not Petitioner that sought to introduce Dr. Camara's testimony in this case but Respondent that sought to admit Dr. Camara's testimony in its case-in-chief. The court's ruling, although it would have disallowed Respondent from introducing the evidence in its case-in-chief would have allowed Respondent to use the evidence to impeach Petitioner on cross-examination. Without any reference to the juvenile incident or the evidence by Respondent, Petitioner could not have "opened the door" to its use.

In connection with (4), the dissent suggests that because "HRS § 571-84(h) does not apply absent an adjudication[,] . . . [i]t would follow that . . . the admission of information relating to [the] misconduct" of the juvenile who was adjudicated would be admissible in adult adversarial proceedings because "[o]therwise a juvenile who was adjudicated would stand in a substantially better position at his adult trial than one who was not adjudicated, despite having engaged in the same conduct." Dissenting opinion at 37-38. It should be apparent, however, that there would be even more reason for the court to exclude previously been inadmissible; e.g., when a criminal defendant introduces evidence of his good character, he 'opens the door' to prosecution evidence of bad character." 21 Charles Alan Wright, et al., Federal Practice and Procedure: Evidence § 5039 at 829 (2d ed. 2000); State v. McElroy, 105 Hawai'i 352, 357, 97 P.3d 1004, 1009 (2004) ("When a defendant testifies to certain facts or issues during his direct examination, he 'opens the door' to further inquiry into those matters on cross-examination.") (Internal quotation marks and citation omitted.)

reference to the "misconduct[,]" id., of a juvenile where he or she was not adjudicated a law violator. The dissent suggests, nevertheless, that evidence of the misconduct, without the adjudication of a law violation, should be admissible. This would contravene the ban against use of the evidence for any purpose whatsoever in HRS § 571-84(h). The same would apply to efforts of admitting "bad acts" under HRE Rule 404(b).

Dissenting opinion at 38 n.22.

Ultimately, in any event, it would not be a "reasonable inference" that Petitioner "should have known," based on Dr. Camara's testimony, that one punch could have caused death. See HRE Rules 403, 404. As stated previously, Dr. Camara did not expressly testify that punching and kicking someone several times in the face could cause a substantial risk of death. The State asked Dr. Camara, "[B]ased on your education, training and experience, with respect to the injuries to [complainant] . . . , did the injury create a substantial risk of death?" (Emphasis added.) He replied, "No." (Emphasis added.) The State then showed Dr. Camara "HPD Form 13." He explained, "When I filled this out, I was thinking more in terms of an injury of the severity that [complainant] had[,] could have led him to have a subdural hematoma." On cross-examination, Dr. Camara affirmed that, "when [he] talked about substantial risk of death with brain hemorrhaging causing a subdural hematoma, [he] said . . . the type of injury [complainant] had could cause a subdural hematoma but in this case it didn't[.]" (Emphasis added.) Dr. Camara was asked on cross-examination whether in his conclusion regarding complainant's injuries creating a substantial risk of death, he was "talking about possibilities[" and he responded, "The risk, yes." (Emphasis added.)

The instant case involved a single punch to decedent's head that did not result in a fracture of any kind, and plainly, the multiple kicks and punches in the juvenile case did not cause death. In the instant case only one punch caused death. In light of the logical opposing conclusions that would be drawn from the two incidents, the existence of the supposed fact that one punch could cause death and that Petitioner would know this, would not be made more or less probable by evidence that the multiple kicks and punches in the juvenile case that were far more "severe" did not cause death.

Because similarity between the two incidents is lacking, evidence of Dr. Camara's testimony, and the qualifications therein, would not tend to prove the "fact" that Petitioner would know from such testimony that one punch could create a substantial risk of death more or less probable. The facts in the juvenile proceedings were not so similar to the facts in this case so as to impute to Petitioner knowledge of the fatal effect of one punch. See discussion, supra. Moreover, Dr. Camara testified on cross-examination that the "risk" of death was only a "possibility," not that it was "substantial," removing the existence of Petitioner's knowledge as a fact from the realm of probability.

Also, admission of the doctor's testimony rests on several unstated assumptions that undercut the testimony's probative value. There is nothing to establish that Petitioner, who was a juvenile at the time, could deduce from Dr. Camara's opinion testimony that a single punch could cause the same injuries, of the same severity, suffered by complainant, which could then in turn, create a substantial risk of death to decedent. It would have to be assumed that Petitioner, as a juvenile, understood the import of the testimony and that although the doctor rendered an opinion with respect to a specific case, that opinion could be treated as a matter of incontrovertible fact in all cases so as to impeach Petitioner in the instant case. Under these circumstances, Dr. Camara's testimony was not probative of whether Petitioner knew a single punch could purportedly cause a substantial risk of death. In sum, the juvenile evidence was neither relevant nor probative of the fact that Petitioner would know a single punch could cause a substantial and unjustifiable risk of death, but would only result in unfair prejudice. See HRE Rules 403, 404.
