Every person has and faces unconscious bias, which plays a crucial role in how we perceive individual and collective achievements. To better understand ways that we all carry unconscious biases, many organizations in Hawai'i's legal community are offering implicit bias trainings to their employees or are now exploring options to hold additional trainings. Join us for a conversation about strengthening these trainings in order to identify and address the bias itself, and also to create space for the conversations that arise once biases and actions needed to eliminate discriminatory behaviors are recognized.

Introduction by Professor Susan Serrano, Associate Director of Ka Huli Ao Center for Excellence in Native Hawaiian Law at the William S. Richardson School of Law. Panel presentation by Louise Ing, Partner at Dentons' Honolulu office (moderator); Professor Justin Levinson, Professor of Law at the William S. Richardson School of Law; Jamila Jarmon, In-House Counsel at Elemental Excelsior; and Keahe Davis, Education Director at the King Kamehameha V Judiciary History Center.
